That way! No, that way! - D'Karla Davis, David Setton, Jeff DeWolf, and Rachel Schneider deliberate over where to "do lunch". These are just four of the world class students at Alameda High School.

As different as black and white - Tia Sofatzis and Sandy Fong compare and contrast in their distinct styles of dress. Sofatzis and Fong are both juniors.

Hey! She's mine! - John Ro is on top of the world, girl in hand. Joanna Song disagrees. Ro enjoys playing tennis.

WORLD

Alameda High School is situated at crossroads between countless cultures. Just five miles away from San Francisco, perhaps the center of cultural exchange on the West Coast, Alameda has, in its people and customs, inherited the same tradition of diversity.

"I love living near San Francisco because you're open to more options," said Lisa Inman, "It's important for schools to be ethnically diverse. It makes us more open to new things and less likely to be prejudiced."

In a place where so many different ways of life are meshed together, we, the students of Alameda High, have accepted these differences and have learned from them.

"Ethnic diversity used to mean something, but now we're used to it," said Jeff DeWolf. — continued on next page

Look Ma, no hands! - Linda Sae Jang is ecstatic at the prospect of getting an "A" in science class. Sae Jang is a member of the JV volleyball team.

"It doesn't matter what race they are, as long as they're my friends," said Erick Kapamas. These differences have allowed us to be open minded about the original qualities of ourselves and others.

"Everyone seems to fit in," said Mae Ng. "There's a friendly atmosphere here," said Chris Wong.

There is a wide variety of classes designed for every conceivable interest, be it art, music, sports, history, literature, science, foreign languages, journalism, or maybe even math.

"As a senior, I feel I've learned a lot from the variety of classes offered to me during my four years here," said Michelle Eckert.

Bush, Dukakis, or Keiser? - Student Body President Rick Keiser helps out with Freshman Orientation. Keiser has been involved with student government all through high school.

Go Hawaiian! - Jane Bordalo, Vicki Bright, Heather Colvin, Ryan Swift, Valerie Chippione and Jennifer Sherratt are en route to Hawaii. All are freshmen.

Am I looking at a yearbook or Vogue? - On her way to an exclusive engagement with the Attendance Office, Karen Mabee allows time out for pictures by the press. Mabee hopes to be on the AHS softball team.

Cutchie cutchie cool - Bernadette Tesoro keeps her cool during her visit from "Thing" of The Adams Family. Tesoro is on the women's volleyball team.

A World of Possibilities

Student Life. The Life of Students. The very words conjure up images of rallies, class competitions, and candy sales.

"The rallies are interesting, but it would be better if more people got involved," said Livia Kondor.

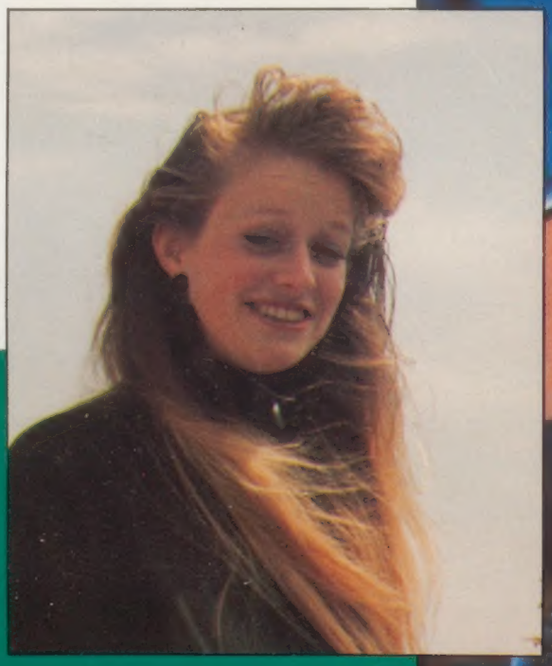

The fact is, student life is much more than eating at the circle and going to football games. It constitutes what we, as individuals do, both in school and out. Some of us create art, others play tennis, and still others sing Beatles songs.

Our lives also include getting through the academic year, although not everything we learn necessarily comes out of a textbook. Being in school, we are presented with the unique situation of being surrounded by peers. The natural result is, "Learning to get along together," said Michelle Eckert. Aside from broadening social skills, practical knowledge also plays a part. "We are learning things to better our lives later," said Marion Borst.

So where do school-sponsored activities fit in to this, the vast panorama of events which compose what we call student life?

"They're a nice change in the routine, not necessarily important, but fun," said Mr. Jim Cooper.

Are you referring to me? - Amy Ingram flashes a glimpse of her pearly whites. Ingram is currently the president of the Key Club.

Staring contest! Go! - Peter Breuer locks eyes with a friend to participate in one of the oldest games known to man—the staring contest.

Ahoy there matey! - Matt Whitenight, sailor extraordinaire, navigates the estuary. Water sports are just one of his many athletic interests

The Class of 1989

FROSH

DISORIENTED

By Stacey Wong

Scattered about the circle and the field in front of the gym, the class of 1992 eagerly awaited the introduction to their new school. As the gym doors opened, freshmen streamed inside, rushing madly to look at the advisory assignments posted on the wall.

For a moment, even I felt as disoriented as a foreigner in the midst of a multitude of new faces eager for discovery.

The orientation on August 31, 1988 began with the introduction of the principal, vice principals, class officers, and counselors. Mr. David Eliaser, our new vice principal, was also introduced.

"I haven't seen the whole school myself, so I'll be touring with you," Eliaser admitted to the freshmen in a friendly manner.

In a more customary mode, Rick Keiser, student body president, led the making of "rain". Students rubbed their hands together, snapped their fingers, and stomped their feet in attempts to produce a full-fledged rainstorm.

Finally, everyone broke into groups according to advisories for the long awaited tour of the campus. Led around by student counsel members and cheerleaders, freshmen were shown places of interest in Alameda High, such as the telephones, snack bar, and coke machines. Some were even given under-the-counter information about classes, teachers, and locations by their friendly tour guides.

The exciting extravaganza ended when students picked up their schedules and took their student body card pictures. What more could one ask for?

"I expect to pass, I hope!" dreamed Matt Ackerman. Other students anticipated a more fun-filled school career.

"Lots of fun and lots of credits," enthusiased Laura Shaffer.

Although their expectations were varied, the class of '92 as a whole is promised a definitely busy and exciting year.

As the freshmen diffused from their tour groups and searched for their friends, many came away looking confident, saving their disorientation for the first day of school.

"I expect to pass, I hope!" —Matt Ackerman

How long can this go on? - Ashish Ranse patiently awaits the end of the tedious instructioning for some real entertainment.

Give me a break - April Parten realizes the heavy load of school, whereas Dana Mouary sees the lighter side of it.

May I help you? - Liz Isaeff offers a hand to Wayne Paz as Elina Choi gazing perplexidly into space, pondering the concept of high school.

United we sit . . . - The class of '92 assembles to discover the wonders of Alameda High.

What are YOU looking at?! - Michelle Higley and Christine Hil. gaze blankly, overwhelmed by the size of Alameda High.

FACES, OLD PLACES

By L. Dodson Partipo

"I ran around chasing little kids, asking people which way did they go?" said Rob Swift when asked what he did for his summer vacation, while waiting in line for his schedule.

Schedule Pick-Up Day, on Sept. 1. It was a cold and gloomy morning. Naturally many students had mixed emotions about the beginning of the school year.

"I want summer to last, no homework, tests, reports," said Hope Heller. Clover Mow added "The summer is so carefree and now there's more pressure."

Many students had a very long wait for their schedules.

"It was because people didn't have the papers filled out properly," said Roberta Kitson who worked in the attendence office for fifteen years. She also added that many students were sent home to get the information filled out properly.

"It was very hectic, students screaming and banging on the windows," said Nancy Finberg.

As students congregated in lines, the sun began to come out and most of the students spent the time in line talking to each other. The reality of another new school year was just sinking in.

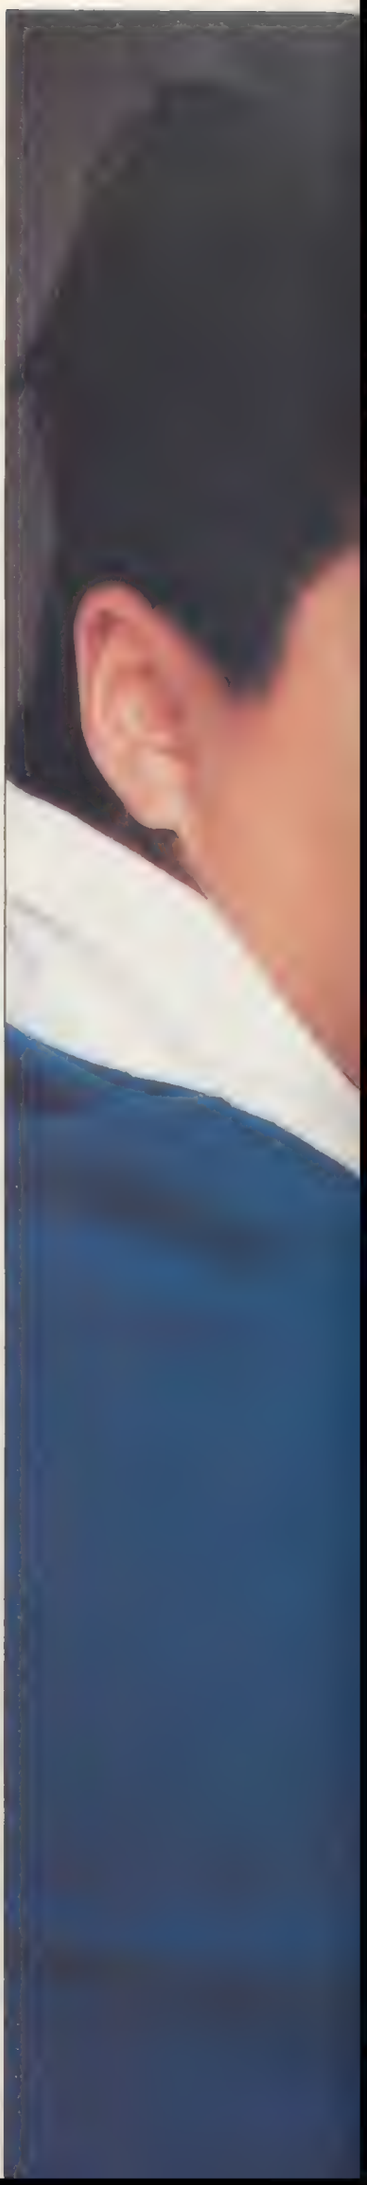

"I was really nervous going back to school and seeing all of my old friends," said Bessie Glossenger.

"It was the first time I ever picked up my schedule," said Holly Kittleman. "I have always been out of town on pick-up day, and I'm a senior."

No matter if you got your schedule or not on Schedule Pick-Up Day, school started anyway. Whether it's just one, two, or three more years to go, the school year like the long wait for schedules, ended before you knew it.

"I want summer to last, no homework, tests, reports." — Hope Heller

THE

Winning Royalty

By Kristi Marquez

The enthusiastic voice of Betty Ruark resounded through the whole audiotrium as she announced the Homecoming king and queen of 1988. Students cluttered and pushed their way to the front to see the crowning,as the elaborate crowd filled the room with yells and whistles as the court smiled for the camera.

"Homecoming is very exciting and a chance to bring people closer," said Lisa Aoyama, a senior member of the Homecoming court.

For the Freshman class, the Homecoming activities were a whole new expierence but the dance brought everyone together as one. The thumping music bounced through the auditorium and everyone danced the night away. From sporting wetsuits, to flashy Hawaiian skirts, the students formed into one cohesive group. The DJ included a Mexican fiesta dance which got everyone screaming, and some students even won T-shirts for their cha-cha.

The shortage of chaperones this year was a dramatic set back and almost caused the Homecoming dance to be cancelled. The thought of the dance being cancelled brought anger out of many students.

"I think the teachers should have to do it, it's only fair," expressed Jen Garfinkle.

Teachers felt that it was a huge sacrafice and shouldn't be expected of them, espically when they weren't getting paid.

At 10:15 p.m., the Homecoming court was crowned. The court was as follows: Sarah Larson and Justin Herrik, Freshman Prince and Princess; Krista Davey and Eric Coler-Dark, Sophomore Prince and Princess; B.J. Funk and Joe Quinto, Junior Prince and Princess, Mike Ross Senior King and Stacey Graves Senior Queen, court as follows: Jill Friestroffer, Rick Keiser, Lisa Aoyama, Rico Rolleri, Craig Boring, Dana Murray, Liz Isaeff, and James Simon.

The king and queen stepped away for a moment to catch their breath after being congratulated by Betty Ruark and hundreds of screaming kids.

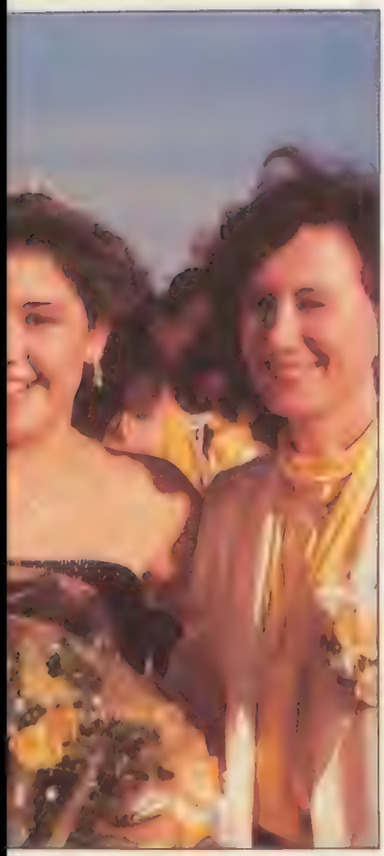

With all the excitiment coming to an end, the night faded away with many satisfying memories.

We are family - Joel Sebastian, Karen Ingeman, Mike Burke, and Aimee Rauscher pause for a moment away from the hiper activity to catch a breath. There was much anticipation and excitment at the Homecoming Dance

A moment of togetherness - Principal Gretchen Wheelwright stands proudly next to the 1988 King Mike Ross and Queen Stacey Graves Mike Ross is one captin of the Varsity Football Team

Dancing the night away - Jill Freistroffer and Rick Keiser mellow out away from the screeching crowd to enjoy a slowdance. Rick Keiser was our 1988-1989 senior class president.

Don't let go - Stacey Graves and Jill Freistoffer exchange tears of happiness after the homecoming ceremony

Plug your ears - Screaming students cheer for the Homecoming Court as they strut down the red carpet. The dance was full of happiness for all.

AND THE WINNER IS . . .

On October 14, 1988, we exhibited our annual Homecoming Parade. This spectacular event brought secretaries from their desks, teachers from their rooms, and united the students in school spirit.

For a parade to do all that, you know it had to be something exciting.

The floats competed to see who came in first. Naturally the seniors won first place, but the surprise of the day was that freshmen snagged second place. The juniors stumbled in at third place and sophomores fourth.

Since the theme was Alameda in Hawaii, all the flaots had something to do with Hawaii. Smoking volcanoes, huge, colorful flowers, and little Hawaiian Island scenes were among the delightful sights.

The day was beautiful for a parade. Even though the morning was rainy, the sun poked through the dreary clouds to welcome the princes and princesses as they rolled down the streets in Cabriolets, Stingrays, and Mustangs just to name a few. The princesses were dressed in all their finery. There were sparkling satins, sensational silks, and tremendous taffetas.

Joining in the parade was the Navy Color Guard, AHS Flag Drill Team, and the Marching Band.

"I liked all the floats, I thought they were interesting and original. I think maybe the parade could have been longer by involving more students," said Norman Takao.

"I could see a Hawaiian football floating down the street," said David George, history teacher.

The parade not only got students out of class early, teachers away from their podiums, and secretaries away from their desks, but served to united all the people who comprised AHS.

"I could see a Hawaiian football floating down the street."—David George

Who me?

Looking good

Happy Days - Future actors of America show some spirit to promote their new play, Grease which was staged in April.

Aloha - Freshmen show their true spirit for their first Homecoming. Their float soared into second place.

Juniors hit home - Chris Morris, Camillo Moraga, Penny Bruce, and Susan Eppler say hello to the Homecoming judges. The junior float came in third place.

TRIBAL

RITUALS

By P. Costales

It came in the unassuming form of a musical note. A simple black dot on paper, nobody knew of the strange and mysterious powers hidden within. It held the power to motivate people, young and old, to wield their bodies in ways we never imagined; ways that boggled our minds, and often defied the laws of gravity. "It" was the rythmic ceremonial ritual we called dance.

From the rain dance to interpretive dance, it kept up our esprit de corps in the midst of the studying, cramming, and sleeping we did in class. It was a way of releasing all the stress and anxiety we experienced during the hundreds of tests we were force-fed throughout the school year. At the first dance of 1989, the Hola Freshmen Dance, one could clearly see exactly how AHS's students spewed out their stress: through their trademark patterns of unusual gyrations.

I arrived at the scene at 8:30 p.m., making sure I was fashionably late to the gala event. A doorway clogged with excited teenagers waving student body cards and money in the air awaited me. I walked nonchalantly through the doorway, paying my fee and flashing an unattractive ASB card to the cashier.

Surveying the room carefully, I noted the interesting movement of the exodus in the middle of the rubber-covered gym floor. They all seemed to be content with releasing their anxiety by bobbing up and down in an irregular fashion. Linda Su Kim, one of the many gyrating students, decided to relax a bit and joined me on the bleachers.

"There weren't as many people as I expected for the first dance, but I still had fun," stated Kim. "The dee-jays, Music Masters, did a pretty good job in blending the 'beat' with the 'modern,' making the whole crowd happy."

While some preferred the slower, more sedated tone of the ballads, others, like Christina Chan, enjoyed the fast-paced beat of the latest dance mixes to "trip the light fantastic."

"There's more versatility in fast dancing," Chan revealed. "Why stick to one certain style in slow dancing when you can fast dance any way you want?"

Indeed, it was evident that nobody really stuck to one certain style. Even slam dancing, a form of entertainment reserved for the more adventurous, sprung up from time to time on various spots of the gym-turned-discotech. Yet all of the students, whether partial to rap or new wave, folk dancing or dirty dancing, were there to fulfill the single task of releasing the everpopular product of studying and work: stress. I, like all of the rest of the crew, found a secret pleasure in stomping the &@#$$%%! out of my frustrations. I, too, found out how powerful and alluring the beckoning sounds of music could be in creating the undulating movements of some of the people on the dance floor.

Dancing, I realized, gave everyone a chance to dance to their own unique tune. On the dance floor nobody could say that you were dancing incorrectly and take off points. There were no rules. Only the music and you, oblivious to the problems of everyday life. Only you dancing with your own style to your own individual tune.

Flash those pearly whites - Henry Lin and Marissa Lavelle happily enjoy a slow dance together. Lin and Lavelle are both active participants in the senior class.

Bouncers? At AHS? - Several slam-dancing men literally 'bounce' off of one another at the Hola Freshmen Dance. Slam-dancing was just one of the array of dance steps available at the first dance of the year.

Singing the Blues - Jennie Wilson sings softly to her dance partner Greg DelaRiva. Dela Riva has been a member of the JV Football team.

A DAY

By DeWayne Crone

AT THE RACES

The bell rang, and in unison I heard my classmates push in their chairs and run out of the classroom in a violent rampage. What for, you ask? I didn't know, but I was soon to find out.

I walked out of my fourth period class and exited out of the main hall. There I saw it. Hoards of people sat on the gray cement school circle, waiting anxiously to experience the up and coming event. It was then that I saw the most terrifying, scarifying sight I have ever seen in my life: beefy football players strutted around the circle wearing the cheerleaders' uniforms. Just when I thought it was all over, the studette cheerleaders ran out wearing the football players' attire performing wild gyrations while flexing their throbbing muscles.

"Didn't you just love the part when the guys wore the skirts?" questioned Hope Heller as she turned back around to watch the remainder of the crazy antics.

I sat there in total confusion when I saw other people coming out, starting to blow peanuts with a straw and shoving their faces into some unidentified white goop. What for, you ask? For class competition points, of course.

What got into these people? Under usual conditions, these people were normal, just like you and me; but this thing, which they call "rally", moved them to do things not even Pee Wee Herman would be caught doing.

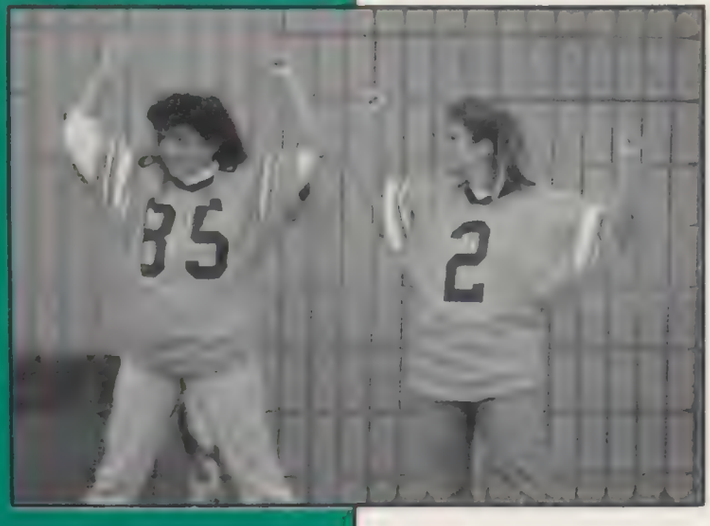

I asked Janice Ma exactly what was going on. Instead of answering my question, she just exclaimed in total rejoice,

"I just love it when people show a lot of spirit for our school!"

There was only one thing I didn't understand about this rally; it seemed like everyone was having a great time, except me, of course.

As I continued watching this most out of the ordinary event and trying to enjoy my lunch, despite of the ear piercing tune of "Don't Worry, Be Happy", I finally realized that this rally was just not for me. Other people may like to wear strange clothes, or watch people do it, and some people might even like to do those crazy stunts. Now come to think of it, it might be fun.

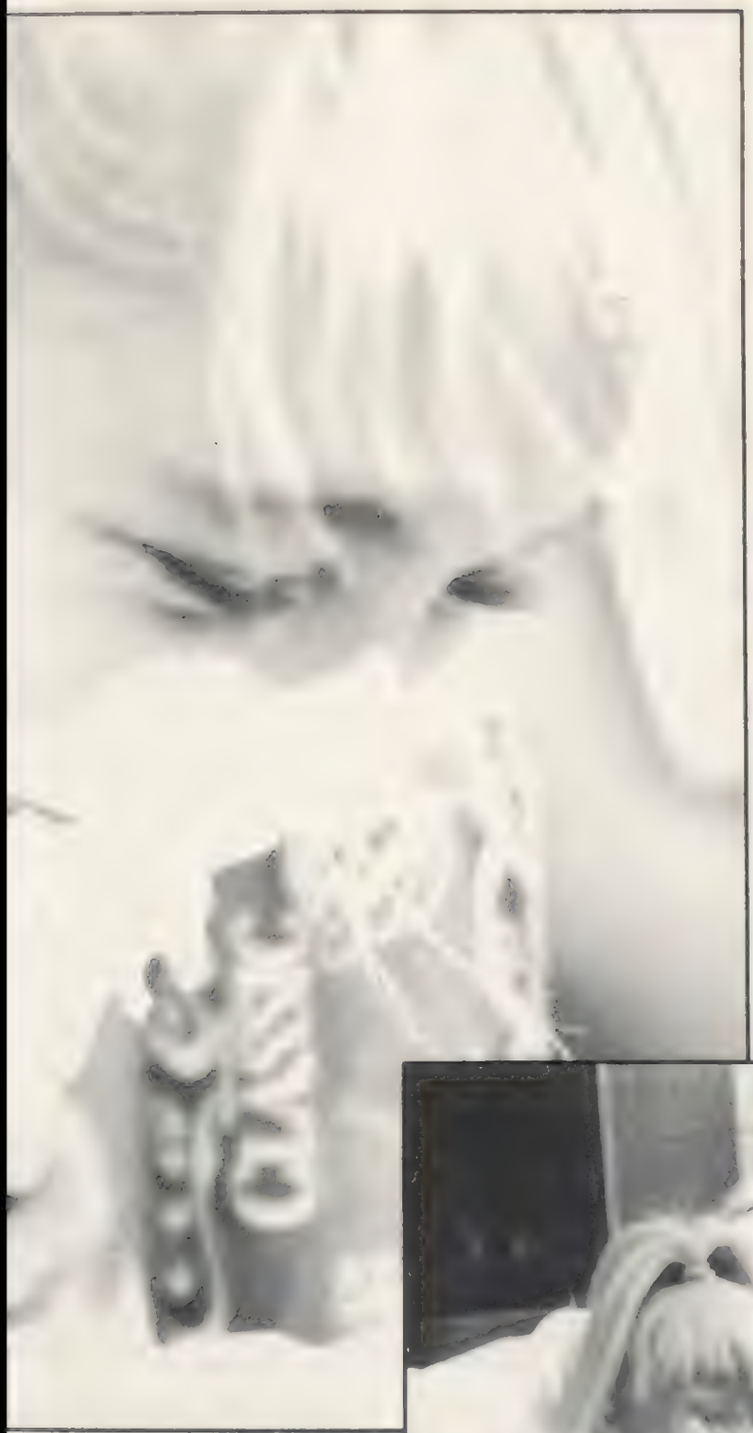

"I just love it when people show a lot of spirit for our school." —Janice Ma

Dig in! Karen Gordon anxiously sticks her face into the pool of the mysterious cream to help her class reach victory. Gordon is an active member of the sturdy sophomore class.

FADS & FASHIONS

By J. Matsuoka & M. Brownson

Wandering aimlessly around our campus after school we noticed a variety of different people. We were eager to find out the opinions of our classmates on fads and fashion.

We first decided to ask a few people what their favorite music group was.

"The Smiths," Scott Dodds replied without hesitation.

America Esparza expressed a totally different view and claimed that her favorite group was Gucci Crew.

Then we rushed over to get the opinion of "Scooter Boy," Greg Bruno, as he was putting on his helmet to get home.

"I like U2, Buster's Allstars, and Bad Manners."

We thought it would be important to find out where people liked to shop. We came up with several different answers. Macy's was Daniela Micocci's. Nick Hass's favorite place to shop was on Haight Street in San Francisco. Then we asked eccentric Amber De Celle where she liked to shop.

"I guess at my friends' houses, and I also make some of my clothes," said De Celle.

"I like to shop at some surf shop in Santa Cruz," said Peter Mastora.

Not only did people have different opinions on clothing and music but also on cosmetics and skin tones. We asked some students what their favorite lipstick color was and why.

"Red, because it makes my face look more more pale and my teeth whiter," said Jeanie Mitchell.

Karen Toste agreed with Mitchell.

When I was a little girl I made pictures and I drew peoples' lips red in the pictures," she exclaimed.

However, Elizabeth Isaeff had another opinion.

"I like Pink because it's not bright and it matches my face," she said with a grin.

When students were asked whether they prefer their face pale or tanned, we came up with two different answers.

"Tanned definately, because it looks healthier," said James Lee, while waiting for his turn to play tennis.

On the other hand some people preferred a pale face.

"I think a pale face is more attractive, and when I'm thirty years old I won't have a raisin face,"said Karena Acree.

Finally, we asked people to define trendy.

"Trendy is somethinng a lot of people wear." claimed Stacey Wong.

"I believe that it is a person that tries to be like everyone else," remarked Amie James.

Our curiosity had been filled. After interviewing a variety of people on our campus, we found that there wasn't just one type of fad and fashion for the whole school, but that there were different types of fads and fashion for different people.

FRUIT

OF OUR PASSIONS

By Sam Iovis

No event, no outside occurance, not advice that I or anyone else (and for that matter, no amount of fame, adulation or money) will ever be as important to you as whatever burning, overwhelming passion wakes you in the middle of the night, forces you out of bed and causes you to tremble inside.

That passion, that drive to create, to soar, that immortal yearning is your best friend. It will sustain you throughout your life.

To Scott Hesse, this passion takes the form of skateboarding. Hesse is not just another student as AHS, he's something a little different—he's a skater. Skating is one of the few sports which calls for unbelievable stamina, unmatchable courage and utter concewntration, which pits skater against environment.

"It's fast, it's a rush. That's all I can say," he uttered in a stoked fashion.

Shannon Miner, on the other hand, expresses herself through dance. Miner has been dancing for eight years.

"The best feeling is knowing when you're out there that you're giving up yourself to other people," she said.

The long hours of practice have not taken their toll on Miner.

"When I was younger it was a sacrifice to have to rehearse all the time, but now I love it so much it's not a sacrifice anymore," Miner added.

So now the weekend has arrived and it has been building up in you all week long. Now's the time, here's your chance. So, slip into your wetsuit, grab your deck, tie up your skates, and get your parachute checked—find your true self and you won't go wrong. Get onto that stage and let your true self shine on . . .

THE JETS BLACK & BLUE

Spirit Week was what made everyone excited for the "Big Game" against our cross town competition, the Encinal Jets. We wanted our stinging Hornets to buzz the Jets out, to show them who was the loudest and of course the most spirited.

We engaged in Class Competition every day of the week. Seniors were at the top of the list, usually winning the most points for their class.

"I won best nerd costume and I tried to get all my friends to dress up for all the days," said Jill Freistroffer enthusiastically, when asked how she helped her class be more spirited.

Everyone was dressed in those funny looking costumes all having to do with beating the Jets. These outfits ranged from pajamas to nerdwear, as black and blue as a bruise and all the way to gold and white. Monday, we walked in our sleep in pajamas. Nerds invaded our school on Tuesday and we made the Jets sweat on Wednesday. On Thursday, we achieved the almost impossible and bruised the opposing team. Friday, the day of the "Big Game" the Hornets showed there stuff in gold and white.

"Nerd day was the best because it was funny to see everyone dress up. It took a lot of guts," giggled Karen Fong.

Many people were wondering why we had a Spirit Week. Was it just something someone made up a long time ago and made it an annual event? Of course not!

"It shows how spirited our school is and makes the other school look stupid when we all dress in gold and white costumes," Eva Hageman said.

This week showed a lot about our school. By dressing up, we showed that we really enjoyed coming to AHS, and besides, it was fun!!

Travelling to New Heights

The Senior Class of '89 and I have really "grown up" together. When I began teaching here in the fall of '86 the class of '89 was in its sophomore year. That year I was lucky enough to be given two classes of Sophomore English. Since that fall, our connection has grown and deepened.

How can I describe the class of '89? During that first year, after a particulary hectic essay unit, my first period class was finishing up Macbeth. One Friday, I was momentarily called out of the room. When I walked back in, all of the desks had been reversed and all of the students were seated quietly, facing the back of the room. Needless to say, I was stunned. Rick, Jill, Richard, Jeff, Danny and all the rest of the students seemed pretty pleased with themselves. Order was restored and we managed to finish the play.

Fourth period that year had a very different personality, but much of the same good natured spirit which I associated with this class. Mary, Jon, Mike, Josh, Dana, Tony, and Tommy made class a pleasure, although they are still primary suspects in the now famous Godzilla hall-pass kidnapping and subsequent ransom request scandal.

That first year provided to be no fluke. In the fall of '87, I was assigned four sections of Junior English. I had quite a few repeat students, in fact many who had been in my first pericd class the year before. With four sections of juniors, it felt like I met the rest of the class that year! One day, at the end of an especially grueling essay assignment, I was called out of the room. Sure enough, when I walked back into the room, it had been rearranged. One of my two desks had been lifted and balanced on top of the other one!

Obviously, these actions weren't the work of a few malcontents. No, this took planning..teamwork..leadership! Come to think of it, the president of the junior class was in both of those "interior decorating classes." Hmmm..Rick, Stacey, Fred, Bryan, Drea, Rico, James, Kristi, Cindy, Paul, and Kelly among others, seemed overjoyed with the look on my face.

In third and sixth periods that year we had a productive and challenging time. Kevin, Matt, Mike,Steve, Johnny, Kenton, Lani, Amy, Denise, and Chris made it very challenging. In third period, we trudged through the dust bowl with the Joads and second period we left no "ironic connection" in Gatsby unmade.

I guess for me the class of '89 is distintguished by its friendship and unusual sense of humor. Just walking through the halls is an experience. Joel's wild energy, Alison's cheerful greetings, Josh's reports on the latest concert, Mike's Dodger pride, and Aimee and Marcus's visits to sixth period stand out in my mind.

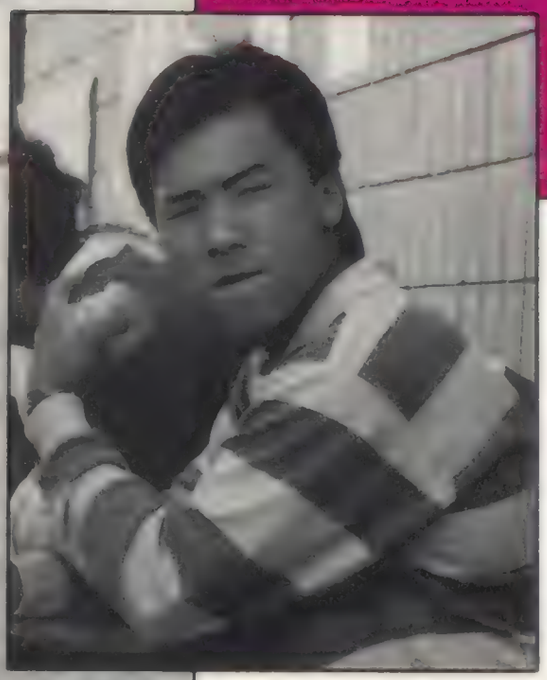

Left with the task of summing up the spirit of the class of '89, two performances of very different tenor come to mind. Last year, as I watched Andrea Campbell walk out to the very edge of the stage and become a vulnerable, lonely soul in the production of Laundry and Bourbon, I felt the great sensitivity and humanity in her portrayal. This year, at the "big game" I watched excitedly as Mike Ross ran over, around and through the Jets to give us the win. As i congratulated each of these people I felt that same old spirit. Both performances moved me. Both took determination and heart. For me, that sums up the class of 1989—determination and heart.

I have enjoyed spending the last three years with you.

Good luck! —by Chris Carman

Doors to the Future

1985 — We came into the halls of Alameda High not knowing what to expect. What discoveries would we make? What would we ever? Our heads were boggled with questions.

Our freshman year started with a bash. FROSH GO FISHING! A theme that we treated lived with and died with. The small fishing boat in the huge gym was not the hit that we expected. But we were not deterred.

We moved on to bigger and better things. Thank Heavens!!

Our sophomore year was filled with yet even more fun and exciting activities led mostly by our Slush Hop. Forever Young.

Our junior year was one that the class officers shall remember for its chaos. After hours of hard work, we found out prom site or so we thought. One week later it changed — to a BOAT! Although people thought of this meeting about how impossible it would be the prom was a hit. Once again the Class of '89 proved themselves superior to all others.

The years passed one by one we got closer to our senior year. It wasn't easy though; we were plagued with tragedies: the loss of friends Monique Jones, Scott Lindsey, and classmate David Wilson.

The shocking death of David brought tears to many of our eyes but the strength of our class became more evident. We helped each other through emotional disturbances. Such as loss of a friend but we survived and grew.

Now that graduation has approached, the future grows with near reality. Many of our friends and families will separate to send us on our ways and no matter which way that is, our memories will always remain home to the Class of 1989, Alameda High School.

Graduation was the time to step through the key hole, open the door of our lives and step into the future.

Together Forever 1989

There I stood, lost in the brilliant orange hallyway, searching for my next class. I could tee my breakfast churning in my stomach and the beads of sweat oozing from my forenead. My clammy hands gripped my schedule as my eyes glanced at the room number. "Where is room 154?" I thought.

Ah, wasn't freshman year one to remember? New classes and meeting hoards of new people were the biggest concerns of being a freshman. The past four years metamorphized new classes to old classes and changed strangers into friends. Through the hardships of Algebra I to Government and the joys of weekends and vacations, our class tore down social barriers and united to become one of the best classes in AHS history.

It was once said that your status is defined by the person sitting next to you. Whether you fit the stereotype of a jock or a main holler, your status was elite because you were a member of the class of 1989.

Love is like quicksand—the more you wiggle, the more you sink. We wiggled ourselves to a point where we knew we could lean on each other during difficult times. We also learned that people count for who they are and not what they do. The power to accept is a gift and given to most if not all of our class. The teachers and the education are appreciated, but the lessons we learned from our friends were invaluable.

Remember, when you part from your friends grieve not, for that which you love most in them may be clearer in their absence as the mountain to the climber is clearer from the plain. This is only the beginning, challenge your limits and go out and make a difference! —by Ray Kang

Changing Destinies

Summarize four years at Alameda in how many words? How about four, one for each year. I HAD A GREAT TIME! Put them together and that's my summary of my high school years at AHS. Sure, the 720 days had their ups and downs, but generally everything worked out.

In 1985, we all came into AHS for a good time and of course an education. Friends have stayed with us and some drifted apart. But five days a week, rain or shine, we were brought together to grow, discover our independence, and experience our first step toward the real world.

We've gone through four years of joys and disappointments, surprises and fears, good times and bad, and now with every event behind us, we are each leaving AHS different people than the ones that entered. Like we learned in English, a person enters into an event, and exits with some sort of change. Some felt the change was merely adding four candles to the birthday cake than in '85. Yet for others, high school has provided an open door of experience that will never be forgotten. I don't think anyone can honestly say they have not gone through any change in their four years of high school.

As each of us leaves Alameda High to advance to our separate ways and pursue our dreams, we will no longer have that outside force joining us together day after day. Our high school years (2/9ths of our lives so far) will only be a memory. But don't let that memory fade, keep all the special times vividly in your heart.

To the special class of 1989 I wish you lots of luv and luck! —by Lisa Aoyama

Memories to Last

We all entered high school not knowing what to expect but over the past four years only one word can describe what we experienced. And that word is memorable.

When we first started out many different personalities attracted together to create something special. The friendships that would grow to last a lifetime. Some grew stronger, some resumed with a new beginning, no matter which way you looked at these friendships there was a bond that brought each one of us together to create ever lasting friendships.

We grew together by learning from each mistake, letting time and encouragement lead us through all the heartaches and arguments. We always had one another to lean on.

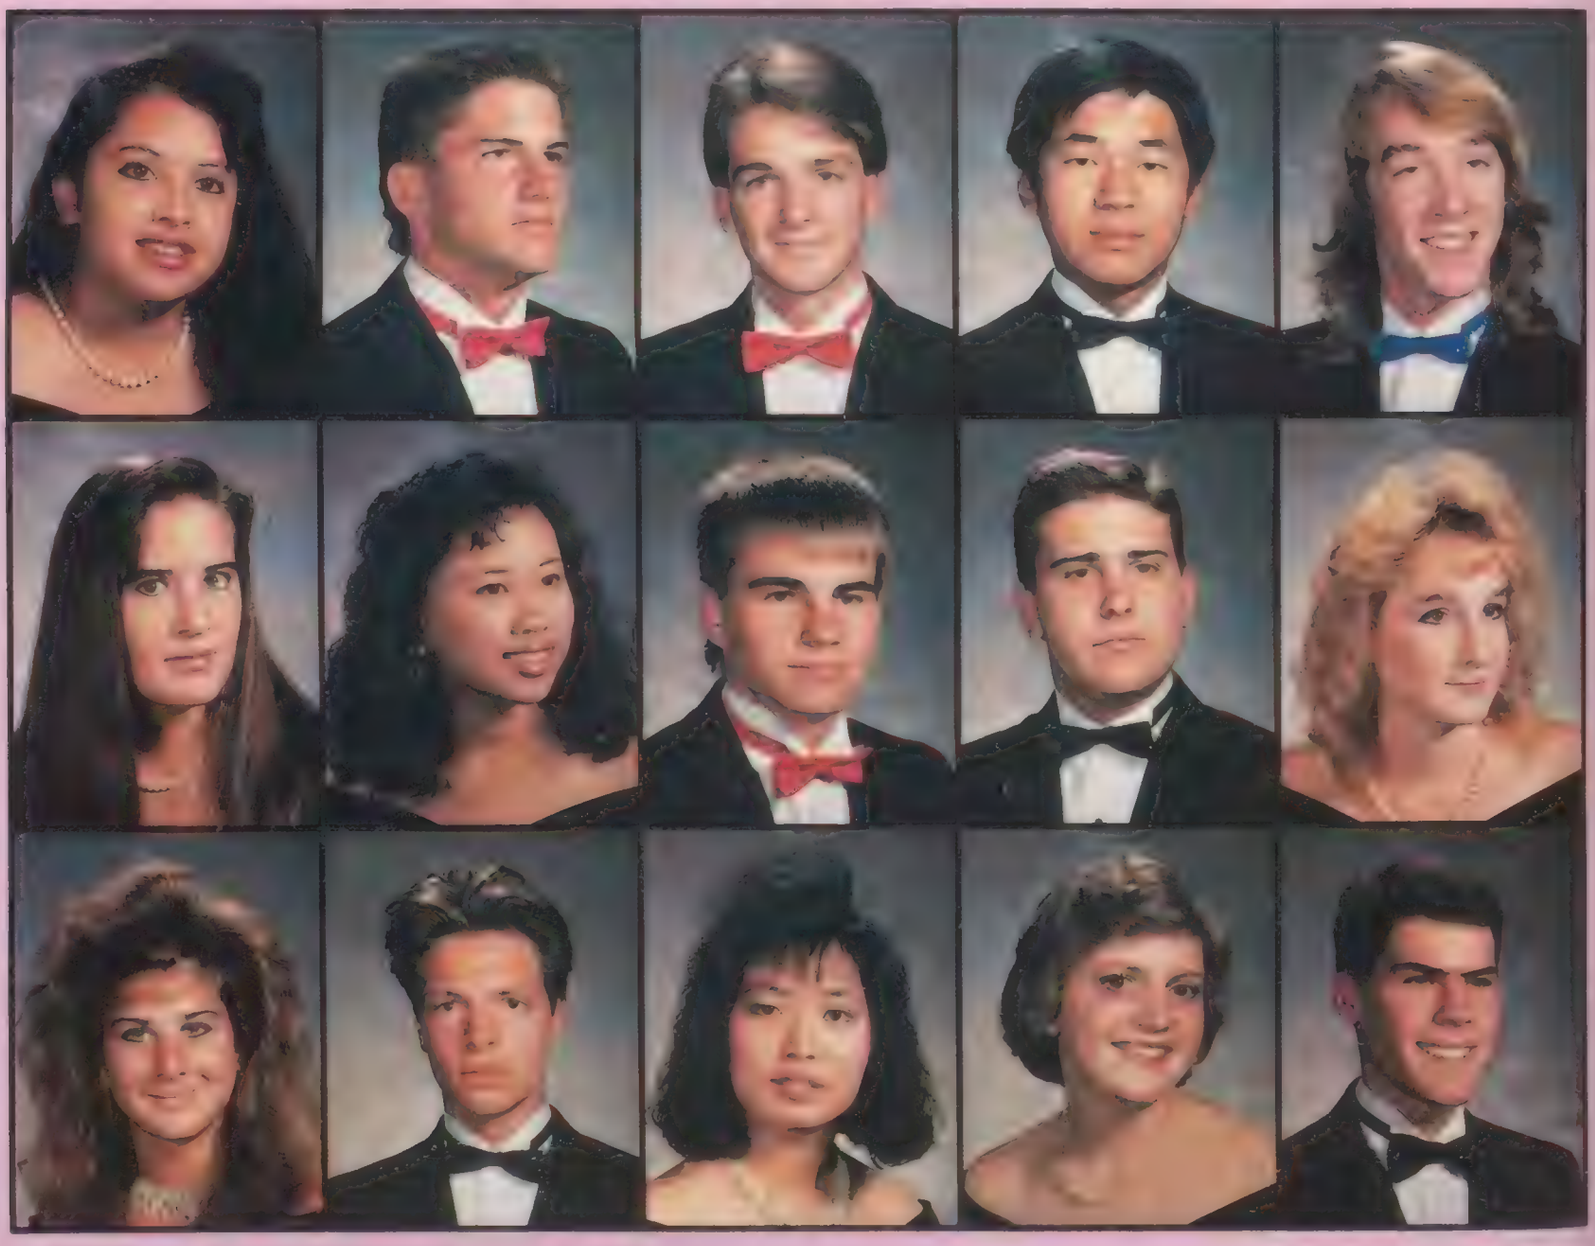

Many times great conflicts broke out among the different cliques, but even these differences managed to bring us all together.

The main conflict was our Junior Prom. Through all the anger and the many heated class meetings we managed to come together and make a decision that would satisfy mostly everyone. Then quicker than we expected it was over and everyone came to realize that most of the arguments could have been avoided.

Looking back now, we see how much we've learned when it came down to supporting one another when times got rough.

The tragedy of David Wilson was a strong part of our growing up. We learned how hard times can really get and how to share the pain and the feeling of loosing a friend. The time that we were the strongest was in crying together and holding hands during the final good bye.

We never expected to learn so much or grow up so quickly. But now that were moving on, we'll look back on our four years at AHS and think of our memorable experiences. —by Kristi Marquez

FOOD FOR MEMORIES

What do you get when you mix memories, fun, and hundreds of screaming seniors? The annual Senior Banquet was held at His Lordships in Berekely, from 7 p.m. to midnight. The seniors took time out to remember their four years of high school.

The roar of the booming music sent the dancers into action. Considering the fact that people expected the food to be tasteless—It surprised many. Dinner was followed by door prizes, including bids for the Senior Ball.

Traditionally, this senior event was a "stag prom". Nowadays, the banquet is more formalized. It is a semi-formal gathering of friends remembering the good times.

After all the activity with the announcing of the Senior Best, the dance floor was overwhelmed by many thumping feet.

The moment that expressed the togetherness of this senior class was the slide show. All the memories from former years brought out the sadness of it all coming to an end.

This year's banquet was arranged by the Senior Student Body, lead by President Jay Yalung and Student Body Spirit Leader Stacey Graves.

The night ended with hundreds of tired feet and many satisfying memories.—by Kristi Marquez

LOOK INTO THE FUTURE

What will you be doing in 10 years?"I'll be preforming heart surgery on a cadaver (med-school). Driving a puke green 1972 Chevy Nova. I'll have ten kids all with braces and an obnoxious wife. I'll be poor, it's fate!" —Dave Rasmussen"I'll be married to a beautiful wife. I'll have some kids, a BMW and a Jag. I'll have a big house and pit bull terrier." —Mazz El-Hossening"A business executive with a white limo and a chauffer." —Tresa Johnson"I'll own my own business, and a black 4x4 truck." —Molly Thompson"I'll be the first person to bike, swim, and run all the way around the world." —Beth Hewson "I'll just recieve my MD and will have bought my first red lamborghini and a wife on the side." —Arie Cohen"I'll be skiing in New Zealand, incredably poor, trying to raise money for a lift ticket, and renting out Corb's garage." —Joel Sebastian"I'll be skiing in New Zealand. I'll also be married." —Corb Matosich"In ten years I'll be a motion picture producer and George Lucas will be working for me." —Martin Harrison"I'll be playing football for the Dallas Cowboys and raising 25 kids with BJ Funk." —James Simon"I'll be flying to my class reunion from Italy in my own jet!" —Aimee Rauscher-"I'll be clocking fat dollars!" —Mike Baca"I'll be hosting Monday Night Football." —Greg Risling"In ten years I'll be living in the hills with my wife on a river, out in the middle of nowhere, after I win the lottery." —Buddy Linder"I'll be the president of the United States." —Jenny Pracht

If you could date anyone in the whole world, who would it be? Where would you go? What would you do?

"I would date River Phoenix, we would go to Venice, Italy and we would have a candlelight dinner on a gondola in a canel." —Stacy McNab"I'd date Prince Andrew. We would go to Greece and have a romantic picnic on a beach." —Sarina Firing"I would date Daniel Mansergh and we would go to the zoo to watch the monkeys." —Jennifer Rishel"I would date Mel Gibson and we would go skiing in Switzerland. Afterwards we would talk by a fireplace sipping champange." —Lisa Aoyama
I would date Renee and we would go to L.A. First we would go out to dinner then we would go to the Lakers and Celtics game." —James Koch"I would date Arnold Schwartsnegger and we would go Italy ride the gondolas on the river." —Amy King

What is your most memberable high school experience?

"The time Jill almost hit a women in a wheel chair in her car at lunch." —Aimee Rauscher"It was when my friend pulled the chair from underneath me at a crowded donut shop." —Greg Risling"It was meeting my wife and having our baby." —Larry Wadford"It was the Junior Prom!" —Stacy McNab"Going to Europe." —Gretchen Anderson"It was when the Music Department went on the Lake Tahoe Tour." —Jennifer Rishel"It was at a homecoming activity when Mike shoved pear baby food down my throat, and he missed. It dried all over my face." —Lisa Aoyama"Of course when we bet Encinal in football." —James Peterson III"It will be Graduation!!!!!" —Sarina Firing"Meeting Mike Swain and falling in love and we're still going out, after a year!" —TJ Ford "Being class president" —Jay Yalung"It was when I took off from my private school three different times!" —James Koch"It was the Senior Ball." —Craig McDonald

Passport to Perfection

Yes, that's right. It was time once again for your daily ritual. Time to put away the basketball, turn off Oprah, sit down, and somewhere along the way you would get to your homework.

Homework, homework, and more homework was only one of the requirements for a sucessful academic career. Other elements included class participation activities and ever-popular tests.

The motivation to do well for many was in the not-so-distant-anymore-future - the big "C" - college.

"Without college you can't get a job and you can't get ahead in life," said Andy Brooks. Entering high school, the often shocking realization set in that elementary and middle school were really just time fillers, that these four years actually counted !

What with competition getting stiffer all the time, and with 4.0 students routinely getting turned away from top-notch schools, it was extremely important to do as good as possible in academic subjects.

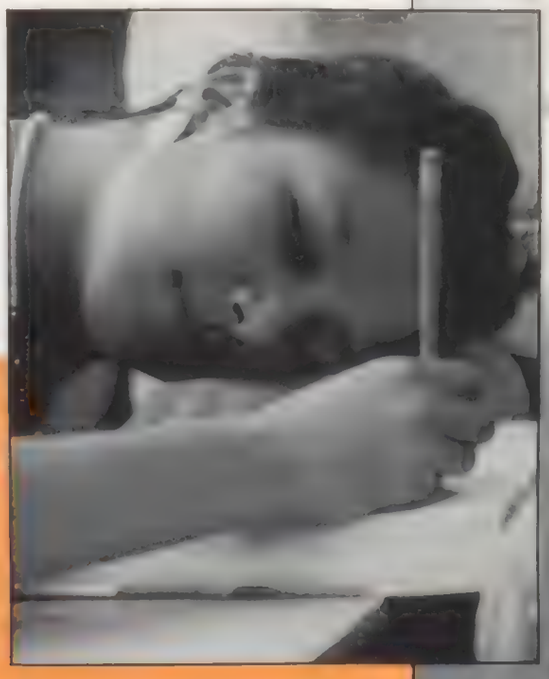

College wasn't the only reason for the existence of academics, though.

"Academics are important in order to be able to make informed decisions in the future," said Kirby Lawton.

It was generally agreed that AHS offered an academic program sufficient for anyone.

"There are opportunities for any self-motivated student to get one of the best educations possible," said CSF (California Scholarship Federation) advisor Mr. John Brooks, "without intelligent education, human beings are destined to repeat past mistakes until they eventually wipe themselves out."

And that, is a good reason for doing your homework.—by Julia Berger

Moms and Dads Explore Our Confusing World

It was 6:45 pm on September 28, 1988, and the teachers had just started to flock to AHS to meet parents at Back to School Night. Ms. Anne Beckman sped to an available parking space just across the street from the school. Mr. Dan Wagner and Mr. David George walked together westbound down Encinal Avenue toward the main office. Sauntering through the main corridor, one could only imagine how hectic the main hall would be after Dr. Gretchen Wheelwright's introduction in the AHS cafeteria.

The time approached 6:55 pm, and the traffic on the main pathway leading from the new building to the old building picked up rapidly like the traffic on Interstate 80 to San Francisco during rush-hour. What limited space available in the cafeteria was occupied in no time. Mr. David Eliaser and Ms. Betty Ruark, both vice principals, strolled about the cafeteria escorting guests or just chatting with parents.

"Tonight is an opportunity for the parents to meet their students' teachers whom they will be with for the most part," said Dr. Gretchen Wheelwright with a large smile, wearing her sky-blue suit with a rose-pink tie.

The importance of Back to School Night was to "just to meet them (the parents)," explained Mr. Jim Cooper, a math instructor, "To see what they look like. See what questions they have. And I can answer them."

"I think that it is important that we have the cooperation with the parents and the school so we can work together in leading to the kids' success," explained Vice Principal Mr. David Eliaser, "Many kids think that the parents meet the teachers to sort of 'gang' up on them, and that's far from the truth."

"I'm a bit disappointed that parents don't show up . . . This (open-house) gives the school an opportunity to show-off, talk personally to the teachers . . . Ask the teacher how the kid is doing," commented Mr. Rudd Gast, father of Denice Gast and Melissa Gast, as he was observing the relatively vacant halls and corridors.

In contrast, Mr. Jack Hewson, father of Beth Hewson, stated, "I think there is a real good curriculum for further pursuits in life, and seems to have a lot of spirit, too."

"We are interested in getting parents involved with the activities provided by the Science Department," explained Ms. Martha Quenon, "We encourage the students to become involved with activities related to science."

Considering the situation from the students' point-of-view, many did tend to get a bit nervous due to the fact that parents wanted to see how their "faithful" child was doing in their classes.

"I feel comfortable when my teachers say good things about me," stated Leesa Dodson-Partida laughing, "But, I feel embarrassed because my father's young, and he looks at all the young teachers."

Most parents were left alone to search for their child's classes like lost souls exploring a confused world. For the parents who were deprived the privilege of meeting the teachers on September 28, 1988, they could only imagine how hectic the halls of AHS were. —by Dana Lamborn

Parents Storm AHS in Search of the Perfect College

I was from my World Series untimely ripped; I felt my fate pulling me directly into the Alameda High Media Center to take part in the annual College Night. My parents seemed content, but I was in a state of total paranoia caused by the peer and parental pressure of getting into a good college. But I soon learned that I was not in an uncommon position.

As I walked into the vacant media center, I noticed booths formed by tables, each distinguished by a little blue flag with the name of one of the many colleges attending. Among the colleges there were Brown University, Cal State Hayward, College of Alameda, Harvard University, UC Berkeley, and many more.

As the night got started, I went from one table to another, gathering information from each of the colleges. I noticed, on the faces of my fellow classmates, expressions ranging from, "Gee, I've got it made," to, "I'll never get into a good college."

For some, College Night answered many questions concerning their further education.

"I decided that I'm giong to Cal State Hayward," said Michelle Cook, "because it will be easy for me to get into."

On the other hand, others just went to survey the scene.

"I'm not worrying about college now," added Alden Parker. "I still do have another year to decide."

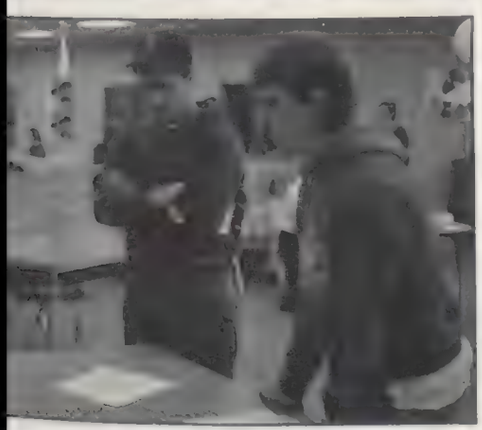

Slowly, but surely, the media center started getting emptier and emptier after people compiled all of the information to suit their needs. College Night may have been terrifying to some, but it was certainly reassuring to others. It was time for the juniors to start buckling down academically, and for the seniors, the time do decide where to apply to.

When I finished browsing, I decided to go home to finish watching the baseball game, but I was too late. The game was over. I really didn't miss anything; the A's lost 6-4.—by DeWayne Crone

Behind the Scenes: Who Runs the Show?

When asked who he would like to have lunch with, Dr. John Searles, Superintendent of Alameda schools, replied, "Mr. Gorbachev. I like the way he has changed a lot of attitues since he's been in office." Like Gorbachev, Dr. Searles is a man of change.

People think of Dr. Searles and scan their mind's photo album in search of that gray haired man who handed you your diploma from eighth grade.

Searles, who is sixty-one and has a wife and a little girl, Heather, has worked for AUSD for five years. Before that, he worked for the Martinez School District for nine years. Even though Searles "thouroughly enjoys" his present position on the board, he was planning to enter the field of ministry while in his first year at Yale.

Dr. Searles likes to spend time with his family in Pleasant Hill, where they currently reside, and he also likes to snow ski, read, jog "When I get the time," he says jokingly. He also sings in a choral group involving the members of the school board, called "Searles' Singers."

Since Searles has been at this post, he has made many changes. Since he has attempted the level the attendance, Alameda High is lower and Encinal High is higher.

I asked Searles what he thought were the positive and negative points on both schools and he said, "I think both schools are equal in the respect that they are both different."

Like Gorbachev, Dr. Searles has changed the attitudes of many people in Alameda, students and parents alike.—by Nicole Sproles

We're totally relaxed - Dr. Newell, and Dr. Searles don't sweat over the impending subjects.

This is what I think - Dr. John Searles gives his opinion on the lunch issue with Gorbi. Searles appreciates Mr. Gorbachev's way of changing attitudes in our countries

Let's contemplate the problem - Richard Thomas, Don MacDowell, Sandy Moser, and Gig Codiga all sit and stare as they wonder the different possibilities of the several outcomes

We're completely entranced - Various members of the audience listen intently to the board's ideas.

As I mentioned before - Dr. Searles, Arlene Norris, Dr. Newell, Don Sherratt, and Tom Hudson, all repeat their many measures and propositions

Ready to go - Jerrod Archuleta and Leticia Hernandez anxiously fill out the survay part

We are ready - Joanne MaCalino and Ginger Lopez prepare to take the CAP test

CAPs Off

The CAP test is a way for the California Department of Education to see how well students and schools are doing.

Friday was college sweat day. Seniors wore sweats to show off their favorite college. A survey was taken, such questions were asked as: How much time do you spend doing homework? and How much time do you spend watching T.V.?

The following Monday, was thinking cap day, seniors wore their favorite hats. That day, the seniors were served milk or orange juice with a doughnut. The first part of the test consisted of writing.

"The CAP test was not that difficult, anybody could have passed it," said David McDonald.

On Tuesday, seniors wore sweats to show that the cap was no sweat. They received milk or orange juice with a big chip cookie. And the final part of the test consisted of math.

"I think the CAP test was too short, everybody had different test, it was a joke," said Tracy Skinner. —by Mike J. Collier

Working at a steady pace - Patty Han takes the Cap test very seriously as she scribbles in the little circles

Great minds think alike - Amy Fasso and Denise Miller take time out from the long awaited Cap test

Let's go shopping! - Greg Risling and an unknown AHS student were caught roaming the halls

As the Zombies Come Marching Home Again

I drearily wandered to school with my eyes still swollen halfway shut due to staying up all night finishing my chemistry homework. Like a sleep walker, I made my way to the huge building already filled with groggy students.

The bell rang at 8 a.m. signalling the beginning; it was a mad dash through the oh-so-popular main hall. Weaving in and out of herds of people, I stopped at the big double doors, caught my breath and calmly walked into the attendance office as the tardy bell sounded. When I entered the attendance office the phones started ringing like a newborn's cry. It seemed as if the lines at the windows wound around and around for miles. I answered the phone and then it rang again. I couldn't catch my breath.

Finally it was 8:15, time to pick up the scans. I sighed in relief to escape the sounds of confusion in the attendance office. I gathered the Attendance Resolution Forms and was on my way.

Entering classrooms on my route I saw a very scary sight. Some people were still half-asleep, and some were without makeup! I screamed inside myself at the sight. People everywhere were slouching over their desks still sleeping.

"I realized once in first period that I had forgotten to comb my hair before I came to school," Victor Baquero said as he smoothed his hand over his head.

"I hate coming to school at 8 a.m., 9 a.m. is a much better time for me," Troy Sanders blurted quickly as he dashed to first period.

As the end of the period neared, I quickly ran around my route picking up the rest of the scans. Suddenly the sight of someone cheerfully walking down the hall caught my eye. Someone was actually awake, I thought.

"I love daydreaming in the morning about girls, dirtbikes, and football," said Randy Pope with a twinkle in his eye. I didn't stick around to ask how they were related.

I stumbled down the hall, making my way back to the attendance office.

The bell screeched, awakening all students from the dead atmosphere of first period. The halls were immediately filled with walking zombies, trying to make their way through the thick haze of their daydreams, to their next class. —by Susie Profumo

Nap Time - Bernadette Tesoro tries to catch a few z's in her first period class. Tesoro also plays volleyball.

Want to play footsie? - Dr. Susan Paden relaxes as she attempts to teach first period

Ahh! - Todd Best streaches as he tries to wake up to take a big Physics test. Best also played Varsity Football

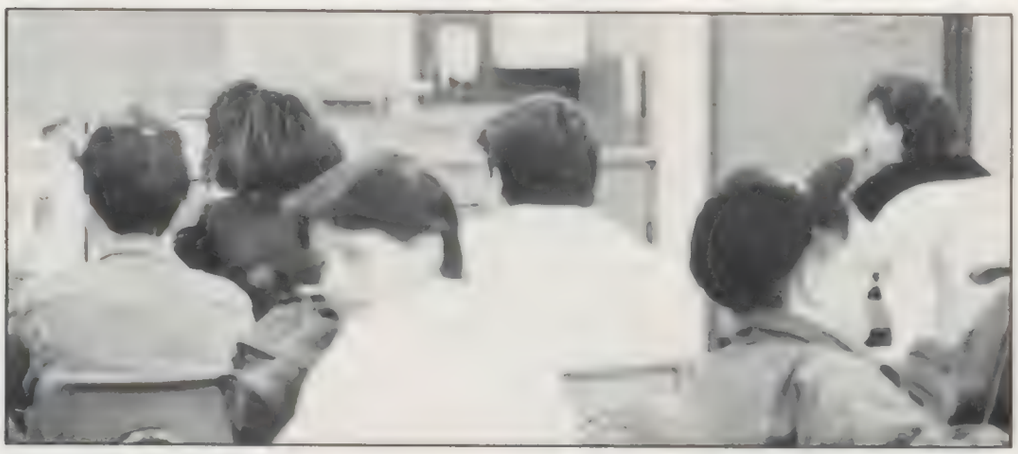

I Won! - Arie Cohen smiles as he defeats Suzy Oram at Tic-Tac-Toe.

You should be a comedian! - Derek Hayden laughs as he awakes during first period.

That's just too funny! - Mario Callejas laughs especially hard at a stupid riddle

What are YOU looking at? - Jimmy Owens looks around at the surrounding habitat in Ms. Kameny's room

Well, do you want to know what I think? - Joey Rios, Danica Connolly, Dana VanSpyk, and Chase Wilson all look ready to be very opiniated.

Wake Up, Smell the Roses, And Look at the Coffee

I had to wake up. I mean, these nightmares about second period were scaring me out of my wits.

The clock read 9:02 a.m. and kids were cursing their way through the congested English hall. I was at one corner of the hall and had three minutes to get up the cold steps of the "old building."

After I pushed my way through flailing arms and mouths to get to my second period Spanish class, I realized that I had forgotten the homework that I had slaved over the night before. This rapid commotion of my thoughts was not getting any better.

I asked Kate Morris why she was here. "I don't know, I wish I was at brunch right now though," she responded.

When I asked Mike Baca where he'd rather be, he said, "I would rather be in study hall so I could sleep."

I toughed it out in Spanish and when that signal of the end of my class sounded, I was the first out that door. I never saw myself as the lonely long distance runner, but escaping second period, I realized my fate.

But, by some miraculous act of nature, I crashed into someone and we fell to the hard floor. When I sat up and opened my eyes, I was in my bed hugging my teddy bear and the 6:10 a.m. alarm was still ringing. —by Nicole Sproles

You crack me up! - Jennifer Kennedy laughs at a joke that Derek Sly made up. Both Kennedy and Sly are freshmen this year.

Don't flatter me! - Ms. Kameny takes a break from her English class. Ms. Kameny has been with AHS for one year.

No. 2 Pencils, Solitude, & Fine-feathered Friends

You have five minutes to get from the old building to the new building. Stumbling down staircases, snagging your new sweater on someone's wirebound notebook and nearly falling head first into the ground while dodging oncoming traffic, you finally get to the new building.

Welcome to third period.

The queer time when stomachs force people to chew hungrily on pen caps and No. 2 pencils, third period has never brought up fond memories for this roving reporter at all. In fact, aside from the hellish trek from the old building to the new building, third period brought to mind no memorable moments whatsoever.

"So," I thought inquisitively. "What exactly do people do during third period?"

Jenny Snider found solitude and spiritual freedom in her particular third period class.

"I meditate with my eyes open," Snider disclosed.

Snider also reflected on the wonders of nature, particularly our fine-feathered friends. When asked what she would change her third period teacher into, Snider looked to the sky for her response.

"I would change him into a bird and make him fly away," Snider replied.

Others, like Cherrie Prado, marvelled in our school's modern architecture as she counted ceiling tiles during her third period class.

I couldn't believe the various activities people resorted to to drive off boredom in their third period classes. Maybe there actually was something interesting to third period; something that broke up the tedium of the endless, day-to-day flow from one class to another.

Before, third period meant nothing to me, but now, I think I'll try meditating with my eyes open or counting ceiling tiles, or maybe even accomplishing some work. At least that way, third period might mean more to me than just another class. But then again, you'll never know until you try.—by Precious Costales

Have a Coke and a smile - Richard Bunker quenches his dry, parched throat as he sneaks a sip from his Coke (Classic, of course). Bunker portrays Otto Frank in the fall drama production "Diary of Anne Frank."

You mean I actually have to write?!? - Danny Truong discusses yet another one of his excellent papers with Ms. Cassandra Coates. Truong is a player on the varsity tennis team.

I'd rather be skydiving - Stephen Runion discusses his after school plans as Patty Han listens intently. Both Han and Runion are members of the Senior Class, anxiously awaiting graduation

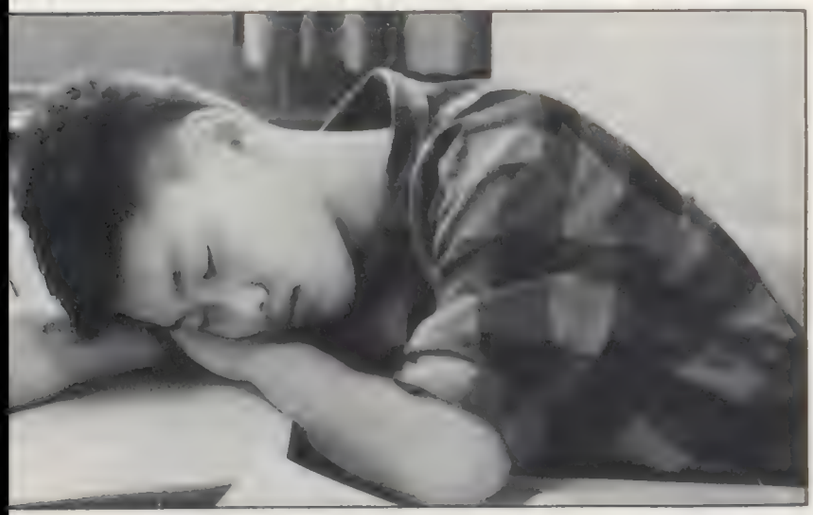

Please sign here ... - James Petersen signs Kate Morris's cast to avoid doing any actual work during his third period class. Petersen is a member of the varsity football team.

Kick back and relax - Luke Scott and Steve Chang make themselves at home in Ms. Zimmerman's fourth period English class Scott and Chang are teammates on AHS JV football team

Some dudes just gotta snooze - Danlun Lim finds time for a cat nap in fourth period Government. Lim has been on the Oak Leaf staff for two years.

Class clown - Joshua Ruggs finds time to entertain all with his juggling talents. Rugg has been juggling since the sixth grade.

Starving Students Find a Way To Cure the Morning Munchies

Fourth period was known for its hungry students. With three periods completed, the boredom set in. Anxious and awaiting stomach owners rested their heads on the hard table top pillows to wait out the hour.

"I just want to go home, fix myself something to eat, and go to sleep for the rest of the day," said Sara Geier, in a tired, drawn out voice.

Between the daydreams, interrupted by growling stomachs, the student longed for lunch. To the students, fourth period was as intense as a Christmas Eve dream with thoughts of cookies, pizzas, and cokes racing through their heads.

"I had a Snickers bar to curb my hunger," said Nikki Freeze in an amusing manner.

"I think about what I could be doing back home in Panama right about now," said Joanna Basil, who just arrived in America last summer. Yet other thoughts were not as dreamy.

"I think about 'The Price is Right' and the soaps I'm missing," said Erik Nolthenius jokingly.

At 11:59a.m. with coats and book bags clutched firmly in hand and the aroma of lunch in the air, the long awaited noon bell finally rang.—by Bessie Glossenger

Whoa! - Joe Hontz actually studies, which is something fourth period students find hard to do. Hontz stated that The Lord of the Rings is his favorite book.

Munch before lunch - Lizzy Wong finds herself blowing bubbles to fulfill her pre-lunch hunger. Wong is on the AHS cross country team. She is also a member of the Asian club.

Food, Glorious Food: It's Yummy to Your Tummy

Grumble.

I heard it in B-flat. It was the harmonious growl that seemed to miraculously appear out of nowhere at 11:40 a.m. From all sides, the noise crept like a slug, leaving a trail of malnourished people wherever it went. What was it? Where was it coming from? Who was that masked man?

No, the sound was not someone's fifty-inch woofers shattering windows as it emitted earthquake-like sound waves throughout the block. Nor was it the radiation siren going off in the cafeteria.

The culprit: hunger.

It's a normal condition which everyone experiences usually between 11:30 and 12 p.m., with symptoms including a glazed look in the eyes, a pale-faced dumbfounded expression, and a severe craving for that abandoned piece of toast that you never did eat for breakfast.

Luckily, this condition is usually curable by any edible item, except cafeteria food. But, one may ask, how do you administer the cure?

Well, some do it, that is 'eat,' in the cafeteria, others go out, but I do it in the circle. You know, that large slab of round concrete in the middle of the campus that resembles the site for a virgin sacrifice?

Sitting on the back half of the circle with its crescent shaped cement benches, small groups of people sat side by side like pigeons on a telephone wire.

Finding all seats full, Carmen Leong relaxed on the pebbley floor with a croissant the size of a small frisbee.

"Ninety-four bucks for the four of us," Leong announced. "I can't believe I might go to the World Series."

Waiting to hear more details, my attention was diverted when others joined the lunchtime crew.

Jeff DeWolf satisfied his appetite by eating a turkey sandwich from Dimitri's, the local deli, and an entire bag of pretzels.

"Growing boys need lots of food," he said, throwing out his chest in an exaggerated fashion.

While some students liked to relieve their hunger at the circle, others, like Jade Tai and Rachel Loui, preferred the old building, the former class of ninety hall which once teemed with sophomores.

"It's great," Tai stated enthusiastically. "Even though it was nice having everyone in the same building, privacy has its benefits."

"And you can have food fights whenever you want," Loui revealed.

Alas, the lunch period lasted a mere forty minutes. But at least the painful growl of empty stomachs turned into satisfied burps and belches.

The bell rang, signalling the end of our midday break and the second half of another boring schoolday. For most of us, lunch was our best class of the day. Well, at least until the weekend, but that's another story.—by Precious Costales

Oh, what a relief it is - Deborah Jew beams with delight, her stomach filled and her appetite satiated. Jew plays tennis for our Varsity Tennis Team.

Gosh, I wish I had sunglasses too . . . - Tyler Jones, Rob Swift and Ray Kang enjoy the scorching heat while Swift squints from the brilliant sun. Swift is an honored member of the AHS Cross Country Team

The heat is on - Hordes of hungry scholars bask at the circle. The circle is a favorite hot spot for starving students.

Consequences of Your Lunch: Hyper or Fatigued for 5th Period

"Oh no" The first bell has rung, the dreaded fifth period awaits. Many students, after enjoying a food filled recreation period between fourth and fifth period classes, are reluctant to go back to class. Hesitantly, most students walk slowly and sluggishly back to class. Even though the students seem to be truly irritated about having to go back to class, their energy spurts up the moment they are seated and the second bell rings.

I asked Carmel Zimmerman what she disliked about fifth period, "Every one of my fifth period classes has been wild because you've got thirty kids full of sugar," she replied.

When I asked the same question of Tia Sofatzis, she answered, "It is hard to stay awake because I just ate lunch and I have Algebra so it's boring."

I began to wonder, whether teachers are the same as students after lunch. So I asked my fellow students if they found teachers more relaxed and easy going after lunch or are they more strict?

"If they eat Hot cup o' noodles they are more soothed and relaxed for fifth period, but if they eat frozen yogurt for lunch they are more sensitive," exclaimed DeWayne Crone.

Mini Bhatnagar told me what kind of food puts her in a mellow mood after lunch.

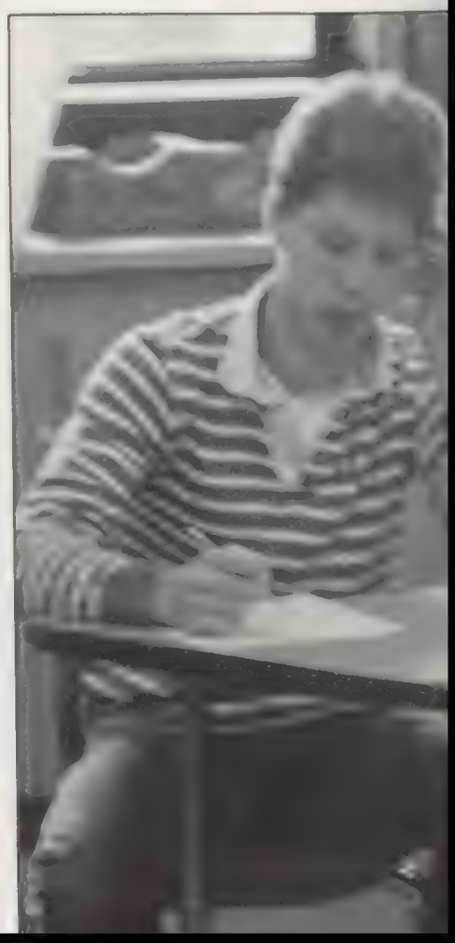

"I eat Indian food for lunch, bread and potatoes. Mushy potatoes make me feel mellow," explaianed Bhatnagar.

Regardless of whether you are hyper or tired before struggling back to class, you have got to do it. — by Molly Brownson

Peace my students! - Helen Duffy flashes two fingers to make sure students remain calm while she tells them of their deadly English assignment for the weekend. Duffy has just joined the AHS family this year.

Truly mistified! - Amos Dupuich trys to figure out whether or not he put down the right answer on his test .Dupuich plans on being a member of this year's track and field team.

Don't concentrate too hard! - Ken Stanley gets intensively involved with his classwork, ignoring everything else. Stanley was a member of this years frosh football team.

Utterly Repulsive! - Lillybell David gives a digusted look after realizing that there is a whole hour left of school for the day, while Karena Acree packs up. David is a member of the 1988-89 varsity cheerleading squad.

What's going on back there! - Melissa Gast looks behind her to see what all the ruckus is about, while she fiddles with her pretty silver hoop earing.

Sixth Period: The Students' Final Frontier

Sixth period: the final frontier and the end of school.

"I like sixth period because I have Retail Merchandising. Our teacher places us in stores, where we could get jobs," said Tara Emery.

Others liked sixth period because school was almost over, or because it was just an hour to kick back and relax. Many others thought about Fridays, going to football games, or how to get out of doing homework.

Knowing this was their last period, people often didn't pay attention to the teacher.

"I feel sleepy and tired sixth period," confessed Justin McBee.

However, Sierra Bradd explained, "Sixth period is the only class I have to work in."

Many seniors didn't have a sixth period. One senior, Amanda Tran, loved not having a sixth period.

"I don't pay attention in sixth period because I'm thinking about getting out of here," said Mark Tait.

"I have to go to cheerleading after sixth," Angie Carmignani commented.

Rob Swift and David Setton had Mrs. Gallagher sixth period.

"What a way to end the day," they said. "She's wacky, she's zany. Boy what a gal that Sal!"

"It's fun because I have Journalism, and Mike Baca is always capping on Dora." Renee Paik said.

"It depends on what you have. If you have something like P.E. or Oakleaf, then its great!" commented Carmen Leong.

Sixth period may have meant the end of school, but it also meant the beginning of our social life.

Say Cheese! - Suzy Oram takes time out of her busy schedule for a drink of her mineral water and to show us her winning smile. Oram is on the varsity cheerleading squad.

Say What? - Tyler Jones smiles as he gets his photo assignment from Phil Fischer. Jones is a photographer for the Oak Leaf.

Just five more minutes - Nancy Phu anxiously awaits the end of yet another day at Alameda High.

Mercy! - Carmel Zimmerman begs Julia Berger for mercy. Berger is the editor of the 1989 Yearbook.

Forty winks - Kabriallia Nabi catches forty winks as Gemma Teoxon looks on. Teoxon is the president of the Spanish club.

A Touch of Class

Every person of Alameda High is alike in some respects, regardless of age. But the differences between each class cannot be denied. Each student is faced with a journey—on the road from freshman to senior.

Every student begins their high school career as a freshman. To most, it is a shock. One minute, you're an eighth grader, ruler of the school. The next minute, you're a freshman, with most of the school stepping all over you.

"It feels different from eighth grade. Then I was the leader, and now I'm the follower," said Rachel Schneider.

In truth, the freshmen are made to feel welcome at AHS, and are as involved as the seniors are in school activities.

An important transition that takes place during one's sophomore year is the realization that these grades count for college! But that doesn't mean they're packing to leave for Harvard just yet.

"That's what's unique about being a sophomore. I'm just beginning to consider the future but I still have time to spare," said Julia Ng.

As we embark on the third leg of our journey, something is blocking the road. It's none other than the infamous Homework Mountains. This rocky terrain takes a full school year to get through, and it must be endured faithfully, because while one is scaling them, there is no sign of relief in sight. Something else comes with being a junior. A new sense of self-confidence. You're finally an upper-classman.

"Being a junior is unique because you have a good understanding (well you should) of the people and things that take place around. You're more confident on your decisions and you really feel the stuff you like about school. (not homework!) The best thing is there's more fun to come!" said Ray Cahambing.

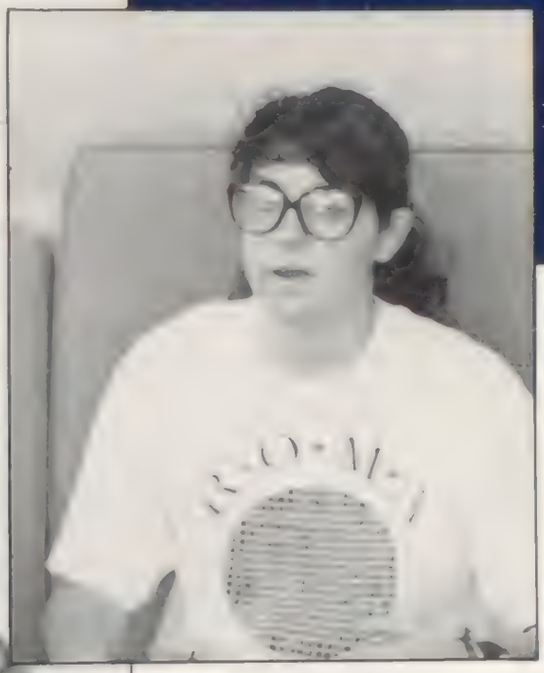

Our final stop before reaching the point when you get to wear one or those long, flowing graduation robes is one, blissful, self-satisfying year of being a senior. The seniors have reached the point where all their major tests have been taken, they've already applied to college, and all they have to do is sit back, relax, and enjoy being a senior.

"I'm not reminded to do all my work all the time. That means I have to be more responsible, especially when I get a bad case of senior-itis," said Fred Fielding, referring to a common affliction among seniors.

Our journey has come to an end. The seniors have graduated, the juniors have done their homework, the sophomores all know how to drive, the freshmen are finally not freshmen anymore, and the door is open to a new crop of freshmen, ready to embark upon a journey of their own.—by Julia Berger

Limburger! - Erika Dexter, Mylene Perdiguerra, and Catalina Hurtado show off their perfect smiles. All three will graduate this year.

Bellicimo! - Mary Ghiglione is dressed to travel. Ghiglione will be going to Europe this summer as a member of the Arriba Espana Club academic changes begin with eliaser and ruark:

Milk does a body good - Sean Ormand makes sure he won't have a calcium deficiency. Ormand earned his varsity letter this year.

Every so often a major change occurs somewhere in the school and this year unlike last, AHS has had a shift in its leadership roles. We welcomed Mr. David Eliaser, our new vice principal to the ranks. He brought with him a new fresh look at things and new ideas to our administration.

His family was always very supportive of him, especially when it came to academics. As the father of three children, two sons and a daughter, it wasn't surprising to find that he supported his children in every way possible.

"I had a very supporting family, especially academically," commented Eliaser.

Eliaser, who was looking forward to settling down in the Bay Area, had been in the teaching profession for the past 13 years. He recieved his Batchelor's degree at San Fransisco State and his Master's degree at San Diego State.

"My views for Alameda High include the improvement of maintenance and academic programs. I would also like to improve on students arriving to classes on time. I would like to see brought about the successful computerization of office functions, so people will see that it, computers really do save time," he said when asked for his views and visions for AHS.

Ms. Betty Ruark, who has been working at AHS since 1980, also taught for many years. She started teaching back in 1972 as a substitute teacher and later became a permanent teacher at Chipman Middle School in 1976.

Earning her degrees at UC Berkley, California State Hayward, San Fransisco State, Holy Names, and Lavern University, she definately expressed an intrest in learning by making a commitment to her own education. Ruark was raised by her grandparents and was an active participant in school activities.

"I was an only child and a very good student in school. I loved school and loved being involved with it," said Ruark. She was a member of a journalism club, photography club, CSF, and a cheerleader during the years she spent in school.

"I like working with young adults and I like working with adults. I was ready to grow into a new challenge professionally, a change," she said when asked what gave her the incentive to become a vice principal. —Don Bensen

Don't they make a nice couple? - Mr. Eliaser and Ms. Ruark wave to the crowds as they pass by during the Homecoming Parade. Eliaser is the new administrative vice principal.

Hello there! - Dr. Gretchen Wheelwright smiles at the photographer. She often takes part in student activities.

A Combination to go! - After ordering lunch, Ms. Ruark resumes her duties as the instructional vice principal. When she was a student, she was highly active as a cheerleader, was involved with journalism club, and photography club.

Hail to the Chief

Alameda High possessed a quality which could only be challenged by a few other schools statewide. That quality was leadership. By that I mean our principal, Dr. Gretchen Wheelwright, possibly one of the finest this school has known.

When Dr. Wheelwright first arrived at AHS, our school had no newspaper and only a couple of advanced placement classes. Within a year of her arrival, we had both.

Wheelwright taught English before she became a principal, and when asked of she'd like to teach once again, Wheelwright responded, "Certainly. I love teaching."

"I wanted to expand my sphere of influence from the classroom to over the entire school," she answered when asked what gave her the incentive to become principal.

When asked for her philosophy towards life, she said, "Every human being ought to be developed to the fullest extent possible for that person. I think people should live life to its fullest. I think it's sad when people limit their experiences."

During Wheelwright's student years she was involved with many different clubs. "I was a member of Student Government, National Honor Society, a figure skater, and head of the Assemble Committee." —by Don Bensen quiet & busy

The counseling office is comprised of little quiet rooms with students going in and out of them all day. The center is run by four counselors, all four of whom have a Masters degree in guidence and counseling. The center's secretary of 25 years is Mildred Ellis, also a graduate of Alameda High.

The busiest time of the year is the begininng of the school year due to new schedules, new students, and new rules. The end of the year is busy because of seniors who may or may not graduate, underclassmen who may or may not pass, and all of the last minute things to put the school year to an end.

Arelen Hoshi, head counselor, has been on the counseling staff for 10 years.

"It seems when you're done with one thing you're on to the next. It's constant," she said describing work in the counseling office. "There's not enough time to make an impact on a lot of people."

Mrs.Ellis said the most common complaint she hears is that students have to wait to see the counselors. "Sometimes we send for three students and they all come at once," said Ellis.

Besides the complaints of the wait, there are many more complaints heard inside the the quiet little rooms. The counselors said they range from various teachers or class changes. But Mary Ellen McManus had a different point of view.

"I don't think they feel listened to. They don't identify at home and they want an adult to listen to them," she commented.

As for the graduation requirements all of the counciling staff agrees with them and feel they are easy to work with. "It's a competative world," says Clare Porter, " they are long overdue."

Off to the side of the counciling office is the career center run by Janet Toepfer. "Most people come in because they want to. It's a different atmosphere." she said. She also added that the strangest thing that has happen to her in her job was to learn computers, but she likes the variety her job offers.

"I like my work, the students, faculty, parents," said John Maiers, a counselor for five years. "It's a major advantage." Maiers added that he enjoys working with teens and that Alameda is a nice community.

As I was interviewing Porter, one of her former students walked in with a two-month-old baby. When the new mother and baby left, Porter turned to me and said, "This is what I like best. Young people stimulate and interest me. I get a lot back, I don't know what it is, but I get a sense of contribution," she said. "I like participating in the next generation." *—by L. super bio Faster than a speeding student. More powerful than a nuclear plant. Able to leap tall podiums with a single bound. It's a crazed administration officer. It's a student late for class. No, it's Super Teacher. Yes it's time for another thrilling episode of Super Teacher. In the guise of mild mannered science teacher, Mr. Leroy Bernadou has raged a war on procrastinating students for the past thirty years. But who is this man, what makes him tick? These questions have puzzled man since the beginning of time, and I was determined to discover the answers.

When I found Bernadou, he was raging the war on procrastination with his third period class. His words were as brillant as his way of presenting them was mezmorizing. After class when he was relaxed, I asked him how he felt about being chosen as one of the feature teachers.

"It's always flattering to be picked among your peers," said Bernadou as he casually sat down at a desk.

The next thing I asked this semblance of higher education was what he felt about the students here at the school.

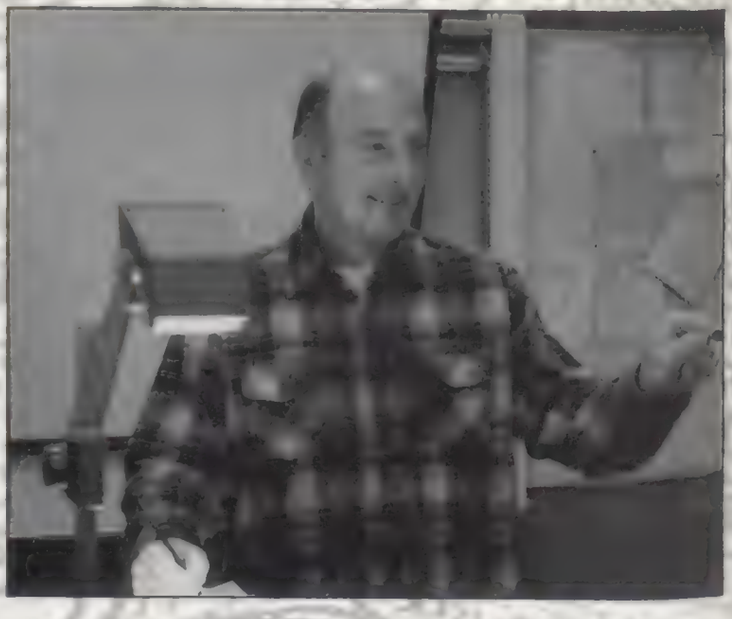

"The students here are friendly not anti-teacher and disipline problems are small," responded Bernadou.

But let's slow down a minute. This man couldn't appear out of nowhere. What else has he done in his life time? What high school did he attend? What were his interests in high school and in his private life. For the answers to these questions I began to dig deeper.

He attended Berkeley High School, where he was a good student with a B average. His interests included athletics, music, choir, drama, and student government. When he got out of college he played minor league baseball in Tricity, and Luiston Idaho, until a back injury cut his career short. He was a football coach here at Alameda High, leading them to several titles. He has brought in walnut crops, and has even been a profesional drummer. On his days off he enjoys going to Clear Lake, hunting, and going to concerts. In closing Mr. Bernadou would like to congratulate the seniors hope they succeed and beat procrastination wherever they meet it.- by Mark Cumming world charm

Walking through student-filled halls of the new building, I start shaking uncontrollably due to the fact that this is my first interview with someone other than one of my classmates. Having Mrs. Sally Gallagher for Algebra II made her seem to me like an all around cheerful person. My mission is to find out about how she really is.

Her dream was to become a dancer. She took dancing lessons as a child and continued during college.

"When I was in college, my mother told me that I had to become a teacher despite my taking dancing," she comments candidly. "She was the one who influenced me to become a teacher."

She considered herself a great student. Who wouldn't? She graduated number four in her class and practically got straight A's.

When she became a teacher, she was suprised to see things that she never knew existed in the school system. She took college prep courses and loved school, so she never realized that people existed who didn't like school and that there was such thing as a general class.

"In all of my classes, I liked all of the students, but once in a while, there is a bad one," she said. "I just treat them good, and I get the same treatment back."

She was the sponsor of the Class of '83, and at the Senior Assembly of that year, she was awarded with her most memorable moment.

"The class that year had a lot of money, so they took some money out of the treasury and gave me and my husband a weekend in Carmel. They gave us a fancy suite, where they sent a bottle of champagne," she says smiling with great expression.

Her career has proved to be quite rewarding. Asking her if she had a chance to do it all over again, what she would do, she kids, "I would marry someone rich and not have to work ever again." She continues, "No, I would definitely become a teacher again."

I now realize that my earlier description of Mrs. Gallagher wasn't quite accurate. Not only is she a cheerful person, but she is also one of the most charming people I have ever met. —by DeWayne Crone

English Euforia:

The subject: Mrs. Joan Brown.

Occupation: English teacher at Alameda High School.

Reason for Investigation: To find out why she is such a good teacher.

Begin Investigation: As I was walking down the hall and came to her door it was covered with a silver foil, various hats and Christmas lights. When I entered the room she was sitting at a desk drinking a diet coke. She was wearing a blue outfit. Her hair was brown with a touch of gray, showing of her true majesty.

The first question I asked her was what was her greatest moment in teaching.

"When a student discovers the power of his own mind, and the feeling of excitement and confidence that it brings," responded Brown.

The next thing that I asked her was what she thought of the students.

"They are the reason that I stay a teacher, they're energetic, enthusiastic, frustrating, and never boring," responded Brown.

She is a very enthusiastic and creative person who enjoys weaving, camping, and writing.

Conclusion of Investigation: Mrs. Joan Brown is one of a kind. Trying to copy her or her style would be next to impossible if not impossible. She and the people at Alameda High are truly lucky to have her. - By Mark Cumming juniors

The class of 1990 embarked upon their junior year with enthusiasm and motivation. Among their goals were succeeding in the class competition, doing well in homecoming, raising money for the class, and choosing a deejay for the Junior Prom. They set out to conquer these goals, realizing it would take dedicated teamwork to accomplish them.

First on their agenda was to dominate the class competition. Whether it was by rolling a gumball with a party blower or conquering a plate full of "goo" at rallies, they showed their stuff to the onlookers gathered in the circle. With a little cheering from fellow Junior Class members, they triumphed.

Next came homecoming. The juniors were rarin' to go. Unfortunately, they were short of luck this time. They came in a third place behind the seniors and the freshmen in the traditional float competition. However, a little wet weather the night before didn't dampen the juniors' spirits. They gathered together and worked the entire evening to decorate their volcanic scene in a military garage across the street from Thompson Field.

Then, the class of 1990 accomplished another remarkable feat. They raised over one-thousand dollars for their class, all in the month of December. Many juniors lugged bags of candy all over school, selling delicious Twixes, BarNones, etc. to hungry classmates. Others bought Round Table's pizzas, of which thirty percent of the proceeds went to the AHS Junior Class. Some spirited juniors even did both! "I feel the fundraisers this year were much more effective. There was more cooperation. It seemed like more people participated, too," said Natalie Zee.

Then, to top it all off, just when we thought they had slowed down, they provided their fellow classmates, as well as student body, with live entertainment during three lunch periods. "Listening to music during lunch breaks up the monotany of school. It's a good idea to hear different deejays so we can decide who would do the best job," said Karen Fong.

The Junior Class stuck together and accomplished their goals. The first class to graduate in the 1990's somehow managed to get through the year, —a little rattled, but still intact. —by Tia Sofatzis making it last

The Hyatt Regency's ballroom was ready to accept the incoming crowd right at 8 p.m.; however, only a very few couples arrived at this early hour.

One hour later, things started to liven up. Couples arrived and filled the room like water fills a sink.

As these dressed up students pranced in, they were asked how they thought the prom would be for the rest of the evening.

"Hopefully pretty fun because he paid a lot of money for the bids. We want to make it worthwhile," said Carmina Mallillin.

She had a pleasant attitude towards things, but others had different opinions.

"The dance floor is too small for this many people and it doesn't seem like the DJ's are taking everyone's requests, but it's still nice and I'm having fun," said Chris David.

When the evening came to a close, I decided that most of the people must have had a good time. What made this prom such a success depended, of course, on who you talked to.

"Seeing everyone from school in formals instead of just in school clothes was pretty neat," said Su Kim.

"Eating dinner was fun since we had all our friends together," said Phu Le.

As people started leaving the prom, one saw those who were only friends at the start of the dance walk out holding hands and those who had been a couple to begin with feeling happy to still be together, thanking each other for a nice time.—by Veronica Armstrong

Singing in the rain! - Tara Jamelo and Mohammad Suleiman hurridly smile for the camera before they pick up the rest of their friends to go to dinner.

With the beginning of a new school year came an unexpected surprise. Not only was the Sophomore Class expected to meet the rigors of their second year of high school with maturity, but they were also given the opportunity to prove it. As a part of the Current Life class, sophomore students were the first class to experience the joys and sorrows of motherhood through the parenting of a baby . . . egg, of course.

For a total of five days, students, as single parents were seen around the campus carrying baskets or improvised "carrying cases" containing their little eggs inside. Though the thought of carrying an egg around might seem quite strange and embarassing, or maybe even an easy task to some, I learned, through talking to participating sophomores, that caring for an egg was more than it was cracked up to be.

Owing to the egg's delicate nature, parents were allowed to leave their eggs with egg-sitters while in dangerous classes, such as P.E., where the egg's welfare could be threatened. It was on one of these occasions that Julia Ng, mother of twins, Ariel and Adrian, left her eggs with an egg-sitter and later found out that they had died instantly as the result of being accidentally knocked over. Granted that this situation is extremely melodramatic, Julia was given the opportunity to adopt another egg which she named Marisa. Students who might have found themselves in a similar situation, got points deducted from an original set of points. But worse than this, parents whose egg's shell was found to be cracked, were consequently charged with child abuse by their teacher.

Although not all sophomores had been assigned twins, most might agree that the responsibility of one egg was as an 'egg'-cellent 'egg'-sperience.—by Monika Chin

winter whirl

With banners emblazoned on the walls in the halls, active sophomores were busy at work preparing for the Winter Ball on December 2nd. Between setting up the decorations, working with the professional photographer, and setting up the marriage booth, there was much to be done.

"We've been planning for over a week and a half," said Daniela Micocci, as she helped other members fill the 300 blue, white, and silver balloons. When talking with Micocci, I asked why the class changed the name of the dance from the traditional Soph-Hop to the Winter Ball. "Hopefully more people will respond," she replied.

The dance, sponsored by the Sophmore Class, was off to a very slow start at 8 p.m. Few people arrived until 9 p.m. By 10 p.m. the dance was jumping with music from the DJ, TNT.

"The music was varied so lots of people got to hear their kind of music," said Chirstine Collins after overhearing the qustion.

The theme was taken from the song title "Never Tear Us Apart" by INXS.

"If two people really care about each other there is no stopping them," said Brian Adams when asked what the theme meant to him. He smiled sweetly as he answered, his arms wrapped around his date, Wendy Leano.

"I didn't bring a date and I had a great time," said Heather Roach, as she danced the last slow dance of the night alone in the stands.

The following Monday banners in the main hall were torn down and another memorable night faded away. —by Bessie Glossenger

Sideline Spectators - Lee Corral and his date Tricia Leckler kick back and relax in the stands, while others dance

Now darling act natural - Julie Long and her date ex-AHS student Travis Swaden enter the gym.

Don't be shy - Arie Cohen and his date enjoy a night of romance.

Next slow dance, I promise - Brian Adams and Wendy Leano sit and debate whether or not to dance.

Smile now - Liza Marie David and her date Manuel Labrador enter the dance with a suprise.

8:02 a.m.

Running late for first period World History, Irene Chin frantically hiked up the staircase of the new building. As usual, she had to carefully sneak into her desk before Mr. George noticed her tardiness. But luckily he never did. Chin prepared herself for listening to another half-hour oral report as she took her unfinished last night's Geometry homework out. Already she could tell it was going to be a long day.

9:30 a.m.

In the midst of second period, Brian Huddlestone found himself amazed by a show of lights demonstrated by Mr. Boomer in Physical Science class. Several glass tubes containing different gasses were hooked up to an electric current and each displayed a different beam of color.

"Science is fun, yet boring," explained Huddlestone. "Fun because sometimes we get to do fun things like the Physical Science Olympics." Huddlestone also found science boring because most of the time all they did was copy questions off of the board.

11:42 a.m.

Sarah Larson eagerly talked on the phone in Mr. Eliaser's office, trying to make sure the arrangements for the dance were comfirmed. Since Larson was on the dance committee in Leadership, she had to make sure there was security, a deejay, decorations, refreshments, and many other important components that were a must for a dance.

2:27 p.m.

Being an English 1 Exp student is a tough job. It involved taking lots of notes, reading a lot of books, and handling Ms. Carroll's puns. Lounging in her sixth period class, Chin anticipated the end of the school day—which was about to happen in about eighteen minutes. Finally, she could go home and watch Duck Tales or C.M.C., stay up 'till midnight doing her homework on the phone, and be late to first period tomorrow.

I have to get that spot . . . - Arthur Dansby makes sure he gets the whole tray dry. Dansby always makes sure he does a good job on his work.

Preparing for the dominoe effect - Jay Daley continues playing with the dominoes on his desk while Mrs. Ann Murphy is talking.

Aim, Shoot, Fire! - Kieran Cooper sprays some 409 on the table before wiping it off with the paper towels. This is an example of one of the functional living skills they do in the classroom.

When I entered the Special Education class I didn't know what to expect from the students. I was greeted by Kathryn Davy, one of the Special Education teachers. She introduced me to her students and had them gather around a table so I could ask them some questions. The first question I decided to ask was what do you like best about Alameda High School. I turned to the person on my right who happened to be Michael Bogdanos.

"I like to watch videos on the V.C.R."

Jay Daley likes to go to R.O.P. and Maria James likes to go on walks.

I asked my second question to Arthur Dansby, who was on the other side of me. When asked what his favorite movie was he replied, "I like E.T and Captain EO."

Andrew Rufo's favorite movie is, "Ghostbusters". "It's a funny movie," he added.

When Heather Brannon is not at school she likes to stay home cooking. "I cook hamburgers and fries. I'd like to work at McDonalds someday," she said.

Brannon also enjoys playing outside with her UNO cards.

Adela Nabi likes to watch football on T.V and listen to music.

As I was asking Jill Fry what she liked to do when she is not at school I was suddenly stopped by her speech therapist who said she couldn't hear. The speech therapist signed to Fry and interpreted her response for me.

"I like to eat and listen to music. I like to go on a paddle boat in the lagoon on Bay Farm," Fry signed with a big smile on her face.

The students seemed to have a great interest in baseball, basketball, and football. When I asked the students what their favorite sport was, most of the answers I recieved included baseball, basketball, and football. Adela Nabi, Michael Millosovich, and Jay Daley like football, but Daley's favorite sport is soccer. Bill Delosreyes favorite sport was baseball. Jon Hanson likes both baseball and All Star Wrestling. Michael Castro and Fernando Diaz like basketball.

"I like basketball. I play basketball with my brother in Oakland," said Diaz enthusiastically.

Tim Smith's plans after high school are to work.

"I want to work at Mervyns and at Nations on Webster street," replied Smith.

Anthony Eng liked a variety of different musicians.

"I like Sting, Whitney Houston, Bruce Springsteen, George Benson, Stevie Wonder and Prince," exclaimed Eng.

My final question was, if you could travel anywhere in the world where would you go and why? Jason Brecal, Kieran Cooper, and Michelle Ma all replied without any hesitation.

"Hawaii. I'm going with my mom in March. I love all the Islands," replied Brecal with excitement.

Cooper wants to go to Reno because her Grandmother lives there.

Ma said she would like to go to China. "I'd like to go to China because my family always gets to go. I'd speak Chinese."

After interviewing the Special Education class, I was moved by their candor and sincerity. I really enjoyed interviewing and getting to know the Special Education students. I want to wish all the students luck in their future.

Ruark and Roberds: The R's Have It

Although we hoped she would stay here forever, the sudden death of Ted Anderson, devoted principal of Island High School, called on Mrs. Betty Ruark to begin her new responsibilities as acting principal at Island.

Despite Mrs. Ruark's unexpected leave, Ms. Carole Roberds, who taught for the last five years as AHS's resource specialist, made the smooth transition from her former duties to that of instructional vice principal with experience on her side.

"I like my new work very much. But during the last year I have acted as vice principal while Mr. Eliaser or Mrs. Ruark were away on work," said Ms. Roberds.

Similar to Ms. Roberds, Mrs. Ruark found her new position "challenging and exciting." "I will remember the students fondly and have enjoyed working with the teaching staff, Dr. Wheelwright, and my fellow vice principal," said Ruark. —by Monika Chin

Up, Up and Away: Discovery Shines Through

On Thursday September 29, 1988, at 8:37 a.m. the space shuttle Discovery on pad 39-B at Kennedy Space Center in Florida, with five men and the fate of American's space program, roared brilliantly into orbit.

During their four day mission, they launched a $100,000,000 NASA Tracking and Data Relay satellite identical to the one destroyed aboard the Challenger more than 2.5 years ago.

This satellite relayed radio signals between NASA Centers in the U.S. and other satellites and permitted some ground tracking stations to be closea.

This was the twenty-sixth shuttle mission, and the seventh for Discovery. The Discovery was one of three remaining shuttles. The other two were the Atlantis and the Columbia, while a fourth was under construction. Discovery and the Atlantis were newer and somewhat lighter than Columbia, able to carry heavier cargoes.

The Discovery's first mission was launched on August 30, 1984. The shuttle rose with commander Frederick Hauck, pilot Richard Covery, and mission specialists David Himers, Mike Lounge, and George Nelson. —by Michael J. Collier

Plane Disasters Plague Britain

Over 300 people perished and over 400 people were injured in a pair of airline crashes over the terrain of Great Britain.

It was four days before Christmas, when a Pan American 747-100 jetliner, carrying over 230 passengers, exploded 33,000 feet over the Scottish town of Lockerbie.

A total of 259 people died as the aircraft plunged through the town of Lockerbie during their Prime Time—when the families gather in their living rooms and watch shows on television.

U.S. investigative officials confirmed that the Iranian Liberation Organization (ILO) had claimed responsibility for the sabotage of the Pan Am jet. A warning had been delivered to the FAA and to Pan Am from a representative of the ILO.

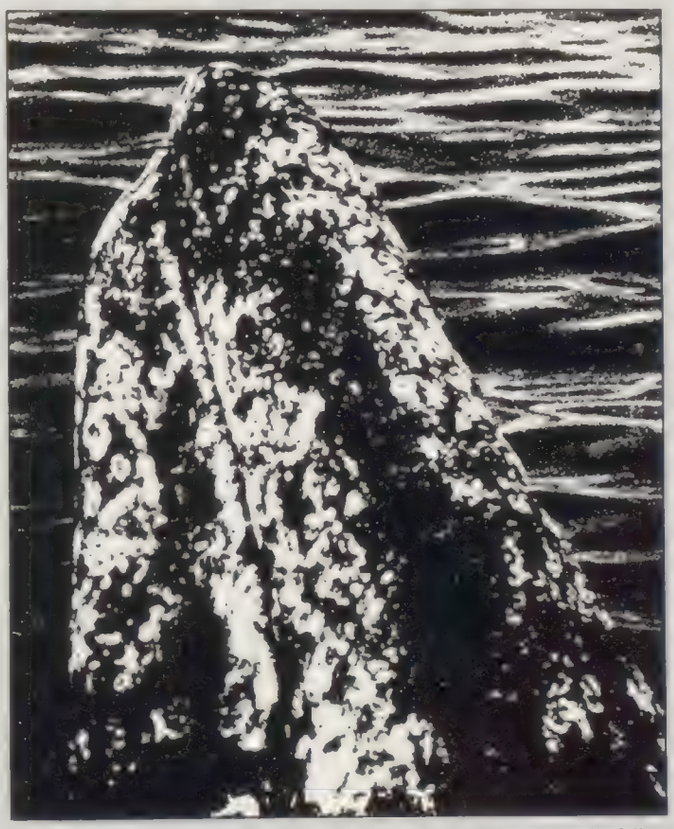

A second jetliner crashed on January 8. It had been confirmed that the crash was not a result of sabotage, but of a multi-engine failure. 44 people died and 80 were injured when a British Midlands Airways 737-400 crashed a half a mile form the East Midlands Airport.

The FAA and Boeing officials reported that the chances of having a multi-engine failure is over a million to one. But that one out of a million engine failure occurred about 100 miles north of London.

It had been later reported that the pilot may have shut down the wrong engine. —by Dana Lamborn

Peek-a-boo! - A California grey whale splashes its nose out of the water. The California grey whale is the same species trapped near Point Barrow, Alaska

A Whale of a Tale

In October of 1988, three whales were spotted trapped in the ice near Point Barrow, Alaska. Almost immediately, whale hunting Eskimos, oil company officials, and environmental activists trekked to this tiny hole in the ice where the three great beasts were surrounded by a massive ocean of ice. The rescuers had hopes of saving the battered and weakened California Grey Whales.

Throughout the world, people's hearts were touched by this tale. Televisions were tuned in awaiting news of the whales' plight. The United States and Russia set aside political disputes to join together and free the whales. Even though one of the three perished, and it wasn't certain the others survived, it seemed well worth the exorbitant amount of money for the union between nations.

Many whales perish in this manner annually, yet, they are not seen by the public. With this event, internationally publicized, it caused a great show of empathy from foreign nations, like Russia, who used their powerful barges to cut through the thick ice, thus leaving a narrow canal for the whales to escape into the Pacific Ocean. There, the whales could continue their journey south, to the warmer waters of Baja California. —by Tia Sofatzis

Move over Reagan, Now There's Someone Leaner: The Bush Era Begins

1988 signalled the end of an eight-year term for ex-president Ronald Reagan. Remember Reaganomics? Nancy's astrological charts? Finally, the reign of the Reaganauts ended.

With Reagan's farewell, three major candidates emerged from the polls: Jesse Jackson, Michael Dukakis, and George Bush.

Both Jackson and Dukakis presented a strong foundation for the Democratic Party. Jackson's inspiring oratory gave him excellent credentials as far as domestic appeal; however with Dukakis and Bush, Jackson was surpassed as far as political experience. This functioned as a prime factor in Jackson's loss at the democratic convention to Dukakis, Dukakis becoming the candidate for the 1988 presidential campaign.

Yet Dukakis, supporting issues such as environmental protection and the homeless, didn't score very high on the likability quotient, a mere 38% (TIME magazine poll) compared to Bush's 44%. Though Dukakis did win the debate, whether he was likable may have been a part in his inevitable loss at the polls.

Eventually, even with the controversial appointment of Dan Quayle as Bush's running-mate, to whom 46% of voters felt was an unfavorable move, Bush still won the election hands down. Neither Quayle nor the loss of the debate, stopped him from becoming president. But what does this hold for the future? Who knows. Just one thing—move over Reagan, now there's someone leaner.—by Precious Costales

Victories Across The Nation

What do Alameda High and San Francisco have in common? Winning football teams! In 1988, AHS Hornets beat the EHS Jets, and San Franciso 49ers beat the Cincinnati Bengals.

After an eight game losing streak to the Jets, AHS pulled out of the slump, defeating the Jets by a score of 27 to 10. For a team whose fans were bad sports, they took the loss well.

The 49ers, however, didn't win by such a large margin. Even though it took the 49ers a while to get ahead and stay ahead, they managed to fly away from Florida with the Superbowl Champion title.

The 49ers' win, compared to our win, had a lot more enthusiasm involved with it. But for Alameda, winning that big game really meant something. Even though we only had local newspaper recognition, we came away with a proud feeling of accomplishment. All year long, the Jets had plans to run us into the ground. We didn't let that get us down. The football players said to one other, "You know guys, just go out there and play your best."

And play their best they did. They tackled guys, made interceptions, and three touchdowns; all with the determination to win, and they won.—by Nicole Sproles

The Glory of the Games: Competition at its Finest

The competition. The glory. The Olympics.

The Olympics began nearly two thousand years ago in ancient Greece, as a tribute to Zeus, the chief god of Mount Olympus. They carried important religious significance, women were restricted from play, and the events were few.

The modern Games began in 1896 in Athens, representing friendly competition between nations.

The two most publicized events of the Winter Games were the men's and women's figure-skating competitions. Brian Boitano of San Francisco, and Brian Orser of Canada, went head-to-head in the famed, "Battle of the Brians", with Boitano coming out on top and Orser claiming the silver.

The women's division yielded the "Dueling Carmens", between 1984 gold medalist Katarina Witt, of East Germany, and Debi Thomas, of the Bay Area. Both skated to the same music from the musical Carmen. Once again, Witt prevailed, and Thomas settled for the bronze.

The Summer Games awarded the United States quite a number of medals. Matt Biondi and Janet Evans, both of California, were king and queen of the swimming events, and sisters-in-law Florence Griffith-Joyner and Jackie Joyner-Kersie proved to be the two fastest women in the world.

The Olympics have gone from being an ancient tribute to the gods to a modern symbol of international peace. Whether the prize was a laurel wreath or a gold medal, everyone who participated was a winner. —by Julia Berger

The Heat Is On: The Greenhouse Takes Its Toll

As large regions of the Earth uncontrollably continued pushing their ways to temperatures higher than ever recorded, a mass of scientists realized that the long-predicted greenhouse effect was finally upon us. The greenhouse effect is caused by our continuing emissions of heat-trapping carbon dioxide.

This summer's heat waves, droughts, floods and hurricanes may only be previews of what could happen with even increasing frequency if the atmosphere warms three degrees Fahrenheit to eight degrees Fahrenheit by the middle of the next century. The possible consequences are so terrifying that it is only prudent for governments to slow down the build up of carbon dioxide through preventive measures, from encouraging energy conservation to developing alternatives to fossil fuel. Among the remedies considered, one was cutting back on the coal and oil use, planting carbon dioxide absorbing trees or harnessing sea plankton that would also absorb the carbon dioxide from the air.

If all else fails, man might need to transport sulfur dioxide into our stratosphere by means of aircraft; by doing so, the sulfur dioxide would make sulfuric acid which would reflect sunlight into space, reducing the amount of solar energy heating the Earth.

If nothing else, these tactics emphasize that in order to regain control of the greenhouse effect, we need to act quickly. The more money the government spends on this issue now, means the fewer billions we will need to spend on future technological fixes later. — by DeWayne Crone

Too hot to handle - Invisible carbon dioxide contaminates the air, contributing to the worsening conditions of the greenhouse effect

Wide World of Sports

Since its beginnings in anceint Greece, athletic competition has been a time-honored tradition of humankind from the start.

This tradition of friendly (and sometimes not so friendly) competition has continued at Alameda High—and for more than just a laurel wreath.

There was a sport to suit almost everyone, from classic high school football to the more contemporary waterpolo. Whether you were male or female, freshman or senior, there was a sport for you.

The athletes of AHS demonstrated an incredible understanding of the true meaning of athletics.

"When I come in last, and I've done that plenty of times, I don't even think about what place I come in. I'm just exhausted and glad that I've come in at last. And then the team's there to cheer everyone on so I don't feel bad at all," said Rowena Ng.

Coming in last, or losing a game would encourage the athletes to analyze their actions so that they would do better the next time.

"I am really encouraged to do better when we lose because then we think of revenge and we work a little harder to get better," said Chris Wong.

Winning was a different story. All those hours of practice after school had been put to good use.

"It's a great feeling when you win, especially if it's a big game. You feel so accomplished, like all the practice and hard work was worth it," said Sarah Hawkinson.

A big part of participating in athletics was the opportunity to work with other people as part of a team. Without this basic unit, most sporting events would not be possible. A team is there to encourage you when you do bad, and to cheer you on when you do good.

"I like being part of a team because there is a certain sense of closeness among the players. Like "all for one, and one for all"," said Hawkinson.

Lastly, athletics not only look good on your transcript, but they're also a great way to get some exercise.

"Athletics are important because you're dealing with the whole individual. You're setting a goal for yourself, and you're trying to achieve that goal both emotionally and physically," said Mr. Dave Fairfield, coach of the Men's and Women's Tennis Teams.—by Julia Berger

Bone Breaking Frosh Football

This year began scholastically and physically, with the physical start coming from sports. One of the first teams to begin playing was frosh football.

I spoke to a few of the frosh players and they led me to believe that they were meaner and tougher than last year's team.

"My father was excited about it, but my mother wasn't that excited. After a while, though, she gave me her support and was positive about my playing football," said Jason Stanley.

Some players had other reasons for joining the team.

"I joined the football team because my parents wanted me to stay out of trouble," said Grant Gingery. Apparently Gingery's parents were right because he did very well on the field.

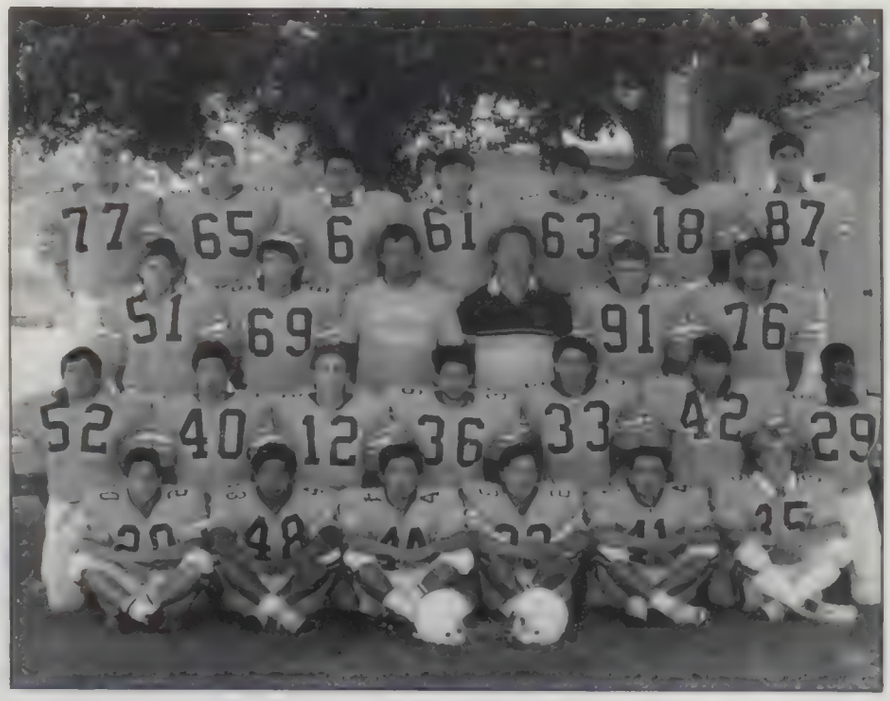

"I went out for football because I like to hit and thrash on the players of the opposite team," said Brian Anderson.

When I asked what the team motto was, I got a couple of different answers from the players, but the most common was just to win! Others said it was to do their best.

Many of the players believed that the strongest part of the team was the defensive line; the weakest part of the team was the offensive line.

"I learned to do my best, keep in shape and not to take anything from anyone," said David Rodriquez.

With that last comment I really did believe that the freshmen were getting meaner, tougher, and more philosophical than ever before. —by Mike Brooks

Ligament Snapping

The 1988-89 Junior Varsity football team had a great season this year, undefeated. I asked a couple of players to give me the inside scoop on the success of the team.

"I would say that the reason we did so good this year was mostly due to the long hard practices with the Varsity team. The extensive scrimmages with the Varsity team over and over I would say was the reason that the JV team did so well this year," said M.J. Mariani when asked his opinion.

"The hardest thing to learn was discipline, not fooling around at practice and to practice as hard as we could," said Vince Chippone.

"If we had to give some one the game ball we would cut it up and give everyone on the team a piece, to end it off we would like to say thanks to the coaches, since we were 10-1 for the season, and we'll be back for more next year, better than ever," said Mariani. —by Mike Brooks

Top Class Teamwork

Memories of last year's disappointing season culminated in the impressive efforts of this year's varsity football team. With twenty-four seniors, and five juniors, the Hornet team worked together to form a powerful team with pride and determination.

"Learning to work together and becoming one family is what our team has done," expressed offensive guard, Mike Burke. During the season, the team practices six days a week, four hours a day, so the relationships grew into much more than just a football team; they were a family.

Though the team works as one, the power reflects from the coaches. The feeling of security set by them, helps the team to know they won't be let down. "I think all the coaches have a real close relationship with the players," said head coach Dan Renyolds. "I like to see guys that want to work hard and have a good time not out to impress."

Another common factor of a string team are the leaders that take charge and set strong examples for the team. This year the team was led by Steve Bickle, James Peterson, and Mike Ross. The three worked very hard to motivate the team during a tough season. Through the hard times and long practices, they stood proud and never let their teamates down.

For the fans, as well as the coaches, the Hornet team proved that good things happen to those that work hard.

For most now, the time has come to move on, but the football memories and golden friendships that developed will last them a lifetime. —by Kristi Marquez

"Learning self discpline was the most important part of my playing football," expressed Jason Lemoine. Lemoine began playing football with Steve Yamasaki during his freshman year. From there, he successfully continued to move on to JV, then proceed to varsity during his junior year. As a junior he played outside linebacker and moved on to playing fullback senior year.

The piercing sound that echos through the stands shows the high intensity and support of his family.

He stressed that in everything you do, you should always give 100 percent. This was learned from being raised by a former pro football player. From the experiences his father had with playing, he taught Lemoine the fundamentals of the game.

Now that the season has ended, Lemoine will continue his career at Chabot Junior College.

JV Becomes Victors

This year's women's junior varsity volleyball team was introduced to many rookies, with only one veteran, Linda Sae Jang. Throughout the year, they were coached by two coaches, Coach Roy Ching and Coach Edward Fong. With their skills and knowledge in volleyball, the JV team developed rapidly with attitudes and skill-level.

The JV team inaugurated their practice on the first day of school in the gym. They practiced strenuously from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. They were provided with snow-white, long-sleeved jerseys, and glossy-black athletic shorts, with mellow-yellow stripes traveling down either side of them. Altogether, their uniforms expressed: "We may be young, but our optimism and our developing skills will wipe you out!"

The attitudes of the JV team was mixed. The players expressed positive remarks to encourage each other to work harder and "give it all they got." On the other hand, the JV players need a little more experience in coping with losses, both mentally and physically.

Coach Ching expressed, "The JV players are young, but they have lots of potential. They should be able to do well this year."

Indeed, they performed well this season. Group effort was expressed well during the games, and repressing bad emotions was extensive. Team members were clapping hands together, embracing each other showing good work and care, and smiles to express their joy to be on the team.

Some of the rookies asserted gratitude for the coaches in their efforts to make the players more competent and confident in themselves. As a comparison, some players had a "doozy" of assistance, all the players were able to work in unison to make the matches exciting and full of suspense. It takes a lot of effort, both mentally and physically, to play a sport that one has never participated. As expressed by Stephanie Saxton and many other players, miracles occurred when they put their minds into it, and actually feel enjoyment in it.

"I never use to be able to play volleyball," asserted Saxton, "now I am able to."

As for expectations, Carrissa Duran, the captain of the JV team, expressed with the utmost felicity, "It's a dream, and I want to fulfill it."

As the season came to an end, it was obvious that the JV team had shown their motto with one alteration: "We may be young, but our optimism and our developing skills have wiped you out!" As skills developing faster than the eye could see, the outlook for the future looks promising. —by Dana Lamborn

Linda Sae Jang, the veteran of the JV team, performed at full throttle this year, and really expressed her potential of becoming the star player. Her serves and her ability to dig hard-driven spikes improved substantially.

Sae Jang began playing volleyball as a sophomore. She continued to keep her skills up by practicing with Coach Ching and various varsity players during the 1987-88 school year and the summer.

This year, Sae Jang showed her outstanding performance acquired from year-around practice. She plans to continue playing volleyball and become a varsity player next year.

Women Scar ESAL

High-expectant players of the previous years rejoiced in the gym with hopes of making it big in the ESAL (East Shore Athletics League) league. New players from the JV team contributed to the awesome vollyeball team with their training from past years.

Coach Roy Ching, a coach for the womens' varsity volleyball team, also commenced the year with high-expectations for the team saying that the team this year possesses good attitudes and strong defense. Coach Ching's experience with volleyball extends to the days when he coached at Merit College.

The players were provided with snazzy, sun-yellow jerseys and jet-black tights, which created a dramatic change from the snow-white, long sleeve jerseys and the normal, athletic shorts the athletic department provided in previous years. The sun-yellow jerseys seemed to caution: "Watch out! We are coming with a vengeance, whether you are ready or not!"

The volleyball team practiced in the gym from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. with strenuous physical workouts such as running, jumping, and sliding. Another year for the veterans meant dramatically improving offensive and defensive skills and techniques require to intimidate and overcome their antagonists.

"This is the best team I've had as far as all-around teamwork," praised Ching. "The girls tend to work very good together."

"In the beginning, the players showed more of independence but the players gradually became one big family," mentioned Vesna Sepic, one the captains of the varsity team.

"They (the varsity team) supported each other in every aspect—up or down, on and off the courts," explained Coach Ching; "There were no pessimistic attitudes, and every opportunity the team had to repress was demonstrated."

Explicit team effort and outstanding ability to communicate well, such as yelling "Help!" when a player was not able to dig the ball in time, or yelling school chants loudly to get the players hot for the game, strongly contributed in placing Alameda as one of the top teams in the league. Although tears rolled down the cheeks of the players after being defeated by the powerful team at Albany, it was obvious that good spirits were still burning in each one of the players hearts. For instance, they continued to yell school chants for hours while the players were being taken home.

"The most important thing is that people have fun, and to play together as a strong unit," asserted Daphne Chin, also one of the captains of the varsity team.

"Serving had improved substantially, blocking had begun to improve, but setting remained the same," said Bernadette Tesoro, one of the main setters on the varsity squad.

On a psychological basis, Sepic mentioned, "Attitudes, skill-level, and sportsmanship—all improved dramatically throughout the season."

Despite not being eligible to compete in North Coast, the womens varsity volleyball team still closed the season with the optimism and the potential to warn the others in the league that they will return with a vengeance next year. —by Dana Lamborn

Daphne Chin, co-captain, lead power-hitter, and lead server, commenced the 1988-89 volleyball season with an absolute thirst for competition, and, at the same time, expressed care and love for her fellow teammates.

Chin began playing league volleyball in eighth grade with Ms. Pat Lopez of Will C. Wood School. She continued to develop her skills with Coach Ching on the AHS volleyball team. She prolonged her training during the summer and periodically throughout the school year.

Chin is caring and savvy person who excels in a wide variety of academics. Despite her strenuous schedule, she managed to participate in four intense seasons with the AHS volleyball team.

Polo, Without the Horse

Having never heard of the sport called water polo, I asked myself, what is this game? A sport played by the wealthy that requires swimming horses? After a little research on this rather peculiar sport, I realized that it was nothing like I expected. Picture soccer being played in a pool of water by a bunch of people in their speedos. If you could imagine that, you surely could understand the logic behind water polo. But there was one major thing that sets it apart from all of the other sports.

"It's much more demanding and harder than any other sport," said Erica Phillipsen.

From the first foot in the water, the Alameda High water polo team was determined to go straight to the top. Their winning attitude, together with their advanced skill was the perfect recipe that enabled them to do just that.

"What our team lacked in some areas," replied Alden Parker, "we made up for in others."

In order to create a successful team in any sport, hours and hours of hard work are required; and since most stories usually seem to have a happy ending, all of the excruciating work paid off.

"We won second place in our division and we also won seventh at North Coast," stated Parker. "That is the second best the Alameda High water polo team has ever done."

After the season was over and all of the equipment was stored until the next, the curisoity of if they were going to do as well or even better next year still lingered in the minds of all returning team members; but until then, they just had to wait.—by DeWayne Crone

Bombs away! - Jeff Simpson dives into the pool hoping that it is filled with water. Simpson is also on the swimming team.

Hey there, you're on Candid Camera! - Several team members take time off from their practice to show off their winning smiles. The team won second place in their division.

Aside from being on the water polo team, she also played trumpet in the school band and currently plays on the school soccer team and swimming team.

Phillipsen joined the team for many different reasons, byt after all was said and done, it was proven that it was the sport that best suited her.

"I swam ever since I was little and my brother was on the team, so I knew a lot of the other team members," said Phillipsen.

She plans on playing water polo in college, but because of the sex barrier, she might not have the chance.

"If I am able, I will definitely keep playing water polo in college," replied Phillipsen. "but women teams in this particular sport seem to be scarce."

Joining the team taught Erica one special lesson that she would like to share with the reader.

"If you are hesitant about trying out for something, try it," she stated. "You might like it."

JV Dunk ESAL

The women's JV basketball team launched the season with a set of brand new players—our future star players. All but one were rookies on the JV team. Co-captain Stephanie Saxton remained as the only JV veteran. Their practices were held in the gym from 5:30 p.m. until around 7 p.m.

This fresh breed of players showed great charisma and a definite positive outlook for the team as a whole. During their tough matches with other teams in the ESAL league, they wore snazzy, black shorts and jerseys, with a soft-yellow trim around the base of the shorts and on the sleeves of the jerseys. This attire made them look like lightening flashing before one's eyes in a brief spring thunderstorm in the Midwest.

They possessed impressing physical and mental capabilities, in the way that they ran like a fleet of Lamborghini Contaches traveling hundreds of miles per hour on the Autobahn. Also, they kept their own spirits up and those of their teammates for an exciting finish.

Co-captain Stephanie Saxton stressed that the team was "physically sound" and that they have this great urge to win.

In addition to their athletic abilities, Co-captain Maureen Kleven asserted, "We must get the basics down and to show a positive attitude."

Kleven was a freshman at AHS who showed great leadership for the team, and kept the team together. She had been influenced by her sister, Lisa Kleven. The outlook for Kleven looks promising. Her agility and speed will aid her in making it to the varsity squad.

JV coach Joe Baca seemed happy for the team and expressed, "The JV players are getting the basics down pretty well."

Coach Baca was the new coach who recently volunteered his time to develop what will have been an awesome team. Through observation, he seemed to enjoy coaching.

Coach Baca's basketball backround stemmed from his days as a player for various high schools and military leagues. He then went on to major in physical education at U.C. Berkeley.

As the season came to a close, the JV team, with their awesome athletic abilities and great positive attitude, became a top team in itself. Their uniforms definitely flashed by a spectator's eyes like lightening from a thunderstorm in the Midwest. —by Dana Lamborn Reach! - Danielle Finger, Stephanie Saxton, and Sung Lee strive valiantly for the ball in a brief tussle. They gain possession of the ball for the winning point.

Block her! - Maureen Kleven successfully blocks an opposing player from a basket. Kleven is one of the captains of the JV team.

Carrissa Duran was one of the rookies on the women's JV basketball team. She had this absolute thirst for competition and a work-out so strenuous that an Olympic star would be impressed.

Duran began playing basketball in the seventh grade. This was her first year on the AHS team. Her attitude on the team seemed to be superb; she was able to supress negative feelings to reveal excellent sportsmanship.

She enjoys being quite active because she claims that it keeps her out of trouble.

As the season flew by, her skills developed tremendously. Her defensive and offensive skills became varsity quality. She was fluent at distant shots and in general defense.

Her future holds that she will continue to play basketball. She hopes to make it on the varsity team next year.

Stroke Of Success

The 1989 men's varsity swim team was excitedly anticipating a successful swimming season. They decided before the season started not to let the loss of talent or an inexperienced team dampen their dreams. They had hopes of accomplishing as much, if not more, than previous AHS teams. Veterans as well as rookie swim team members were anxious to join forces to make a big splash in the season.

The swimmers found themselves at a disadvantage this year, compared to recent years. "We lost a lot of speed and talent, but we have a lot of high expectations for the newcomers," said Luke Van Meter, veteran swimmer and co-captain. Despite losing some speedy swimmers, the team had great faith in the new members, as well as improved old members.

"Hopefully we can manage to break some AHS records this year," commented Jeff Simpson, veteran swimmer and co-captain.

This team, like many previous teams was a very closely knit one. "We have a really close team [illegible], and, the support is very strong," added Luke Van Meter. Not only their talent motivated them, but their spirit and faith in one another did so as well. "Mr. Rodd is supportive to all levels," said Luke Van Meter.

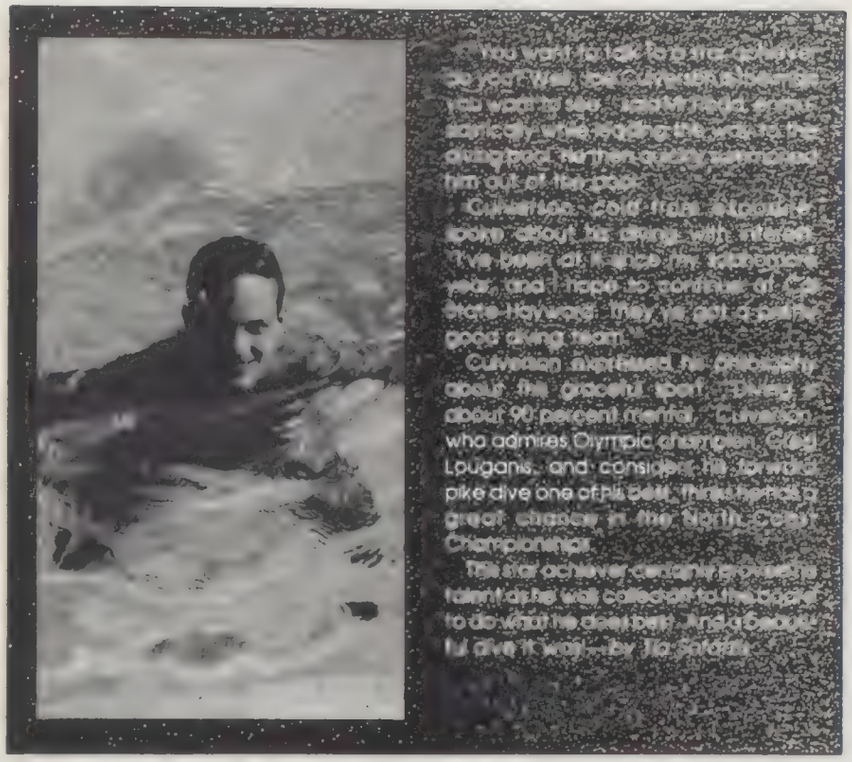

Just by watching them, one could tell that this team had something special. It had talent, motivation, and a spirit that brought it together. What more could one ask for? Success. And that is exactly what they set out to achieve.—by Tia Sofatzis

Best In The West

The score was tied 6-6; all eyes were upon the two players, for this last serve would decide the game. The spectators could see the strain, both mental and physical, on the faces of the players

The ball was served wildly and the ball landed out of bounds. Once again the women's tennis team was victorious and proved that they were the best in the west.

But what made this unique collection of individuals so good? What made them work so well together? To find out the answer to these questions, I went right to the source.

"An extremely intelligent and aggressive group all pulling together as a team," credits Dave Fairfield, coach of the team.

Shannon Howes and Karin Ingeman the leading doubles team, attributed many factors to their winning, most of all their ability to understand each other's game and to know what the other is going to do.

"There are a lot more good individual players this year", said varsity player Dana Murray

The tension mounts! - Lisa Aoyama waits for a serve to begin a match. She was on the varsity team this year.

Howdy - Jennifer Lee takes time off from her hard tennis practice to flash us a smile.

Rachel Loui is a perfect example of the all around great person. Her major interest is listening to the music of U2, a-ha, and INXS.

She learned to play tennis in her freshman year and started playing on the JV women's tennis team in her junior year.

"I joined because my friends told me to, plus I like playing tennis," said Loui.

Her ambitions are to make a lot of money, but she doesn't want to make tennis a career.

"Tennis is fun to play as a hobby, and that's the way I want it to stay," she added.

Tennis surely doesn't seem to affect her social and academic performance. Even when she started to play on the team she was able to maintain a 3.0 GPA average high enough to make her eligible to join the California Scholastic Federation.

Putting Around

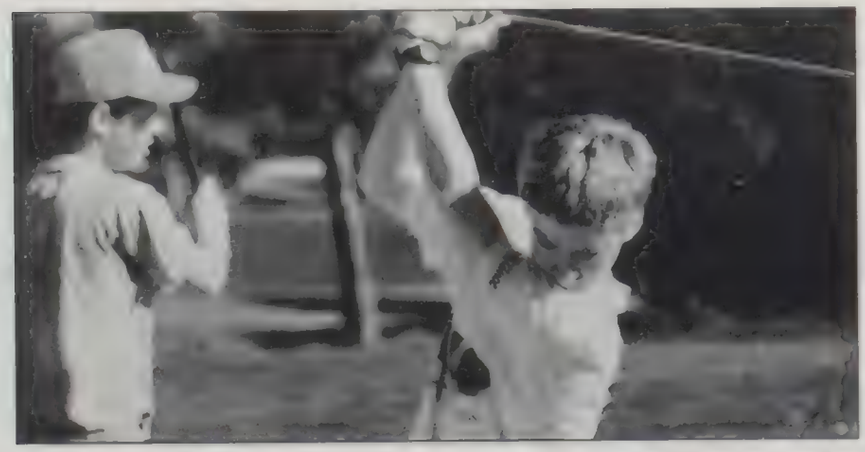

Grass, sand, and a lone titleist soaring through the air, only to land inches away from the flag pole. The incredibly short grass of the putting green, was a sure shot for a hole in one otherwise known as a birdy.

This is the game of golf. First we have golfers, men and women who walk around on grass trying to knock a small, primarily white ball into a hole marked with a number between one and eighteen. It sounds crazy, but really it is a game of great skill and hand-to-eye coordination. The professionals make hundreds of thousands of dollars just golfing.

"I started to play golf around 1960 sometime. The only reason I started playing golf was because the AHS big wigs made me. It was a matter of keeping my tenure. When I took over the golf team, I found potential golf players coming out from all around the Bay Farm area. The AHS golf team has won the golf league twenty five out of thirty times since I took over the AHS golf team," said Stretch Pearson, Golf Coach.

Over the years we have had quite a few amatures and professional golfers graduate from AHS coached by Pearson. Ross Rande, the head coach of Kansas University Golf Team; Cris Moe, who is presently on an Asian tour; Doug Polle, the 1975 Commuter Champion; and Michael Maurce, who is presently on the San Jose State team, were all coached by Pearson.

Grand Sl Sluggers

"Good hit."

"Nice catch."

"You'll do better next time."

If you ever watched the women's softball team practice those are some of the words you would have probably heard from the players. I asked Debbie Stevens to tell me what else they did during practice while she lay down resting.

"First we do stretches, then we work on infield and outfield work, we have batting practice, then we run around five laps to practice our base running. We end with a group talk," said Stevens, exhausted, as she left for a waterbreak.

"I joined softball because it's my sport. I love it! It's fun to play!" replied Shannon Muse enthusiastically.

Gretchen Skillman also joined softball because it is a fun sport. "It's competitive. Softball is my serious sport," she said.

Tahja Fulwider told me that being on the team was great.

"What I like best about being on the team is that I get to be with my friends. It's also a competitive sport," replied Fulwider, who was also on the team last year.

I wanted to know what responsibilities the players had on the team. I asked this question of Michelle Baker, who happened to be one of the players taking a break.

"Our responsibilities are to catch the flyballs, to know where the ball is going so you can position yourself to make the play," replied Baker.

As I watched the team finish practice I observed that the women's softball team worked hard to make their team the best and were supportive of their teamates by encouraging one another to try harder. —by Jen Matsuoka Think fast! - Debbie Stevens tosses the ball to one of her teamates during practice. Stevens has been on the softball team for three years.

How much longer of this? - Robin Derickson, Debbie Stevens, and Michelle Baker, decide to do one of their easier exercises and stretch. Derickson, Stevens, and Baker, have all been on the softball team more than one year.

Tricia Leckler is a sophomore who has been playing softball for two years. Leckler is a shortstop and pitcher on the team for the next two years.

At Lincoln Trail, Leckler was very involved in other sports as well, playing basketball and volleyball for the past two years at AHS. She has also been on the varsity volleyball team.

I asked Leckler to tell me what she likes best about being on the women's softball team.

"I like being with people with different personalities."

Leckler, who plays third base, said that she liked the position because the ball comes to you a lot.

"I want to be a pitcher by the time I am a senior, because the pitcher always gets noticed. My goal for this year is to make All League. All League are the best players in the league."

"I am just looking forward to a great season," said Leckler with confidence.

Get ready to catch the ball! - Melanie Coleman practices her throwing while enjoying a piece of gum
Coleman always makes sure she does well during practice so she can do even better at a game

Do you want some? - Shannon Muse and Allison Bowen take a break from practice and share a slurpee. Muse and Bowen both enjoy being on the softball team.

Frosh Basketball

The ball bounces for the first time since grammar school. The players are all new, fresh and full of relentless energy. These are the future stars of the basketball hall of fame. The players start at the lowest rank and come out in the end as school wide stars.

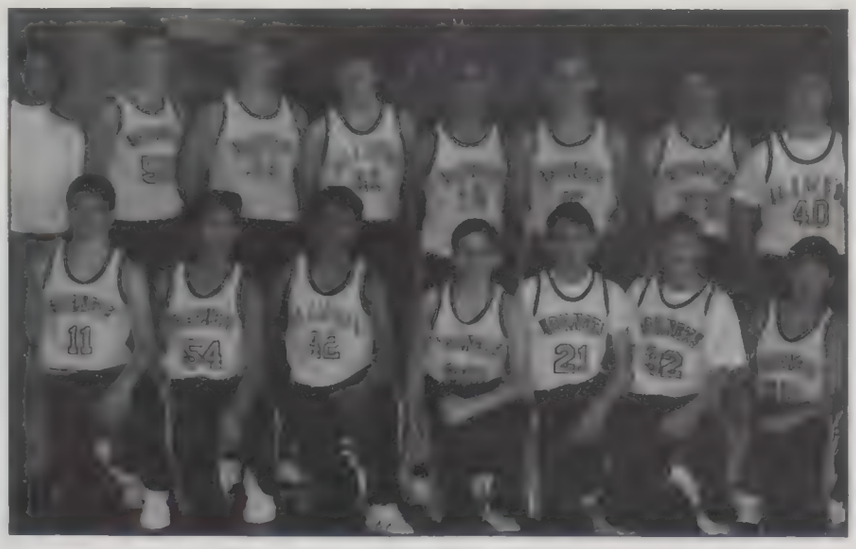

"It's really the only sport that I'm good at, I've been playing for about four years and plan to go out for college basketball," says Jason Sanders.

"I've been playing for three years I love the competition of the sport, playing basketball I become more physically inclined toward the requirments of being a better basketball player," replied Scott Hartweg when I asked him about basketball as a sport of his choice."I've been playing for six years, I love playing the sport but what I really enjoy is when the crowd cheers when I sink a shot," answered Kevin Weber when I asked what he likes most about the game. Weber is definitely star material because of his love for attention and a cheering crowd.

"The game is so fast and your reaction time is mostly less than a second, you must be quick to make a shot and when I do make a basket I like the feeling of making a shot," replied Roy Hamblin, who has been playing for about seven years and plans to play college basketball.

"When I was younger I used to look up to the professional basketball players as idols, teachers, and my motivation to keep playing. I plan to play professional basketball when I get out of school," said Claudio Lane when I asked him how he felt about basketball.

As the year wears on I plan to stay with the freshman's progress, their gains their losses because this is where it all starts. These young men are the building blocks of AHS JV and varsity teams for the next three years, and they have my support. —by Mike Brooks

Jamin' JV

A round spherical orange object sails through the air only to plunge through a metalic hoop and some sparse netting to create a state of pure insanity. A basket is made, the tie is broken by two points in the last three seconds of the game, and the championship is won.

JV basketball a sport most intriguing and can be easily grasped by the naive spectator; each player on each team works together to get the ball into the opponents basket for points.

On the whole our JV team is both eager to work their hardest and as an average each team member has been playing for about five years, so they do have a bit of experience under their belts. Also most of the players have made it through freshman basketball with new experience and understanding of the game.

"I love to score points, it's the best feeling in the world when you hear your name being chanted by the crowd for the baskets you have just made," said Joseph Quinto. Being able to shoot is a very important need when you play, and the encouragement from the crowd is the best.

"I went out for JV because I wanted to have fun and also a spot on varsity next year, I hope to be good enough for college also when I'm playing I'm always on the go," replied Peter Mastora.

"Teamwork, get it, that's the ticket; getting to know your teammates. Discipline, knowing what to do and how to win the game," replied Vihn Ngo when I asked him to give me some positive feedback about the team.

"I like the intense level of the sport, it is a good learning year for me. My goal is to make all league when I'm on the varsity team, and to know how to be on a team and work productivly," said Vincent Chippone; he enlightened me on some of the goals he hoped to achieve before he gets out of high school.

"Next stop varsity, I hope to play college b-ball, to understand other people and my teammates, I also learn from my teammates," answered Josh Rugg to my question about how he really felt about playing JV basketball.

High Ho
For Ho

On entering the AHS gym, home to the men's varsity basketball team, the contest was about to begin. One toss of the ball and the game was in motion. With black and gold trimmed sneakers streaking across the court, the lay-up, and a loud swoosh from the crowd, the point was ours.

Having time to talk with some of the owners of those black and gold sneakers during practice helped me understand their preparation for success.

"The most important thing is the game, no matter what," said Matt Whitenight(33). Watching the game, I saw strong will and determination. These players saw victory a step away and were grasping for it. Most of the team agreed practice was long and vigorous, but the importance was well known. Many team members also agreed on the definite improvement of the team over the last eight years.

"The last eight years since coach Felix Douglas arrived have been the best known for AHS," said co-captain Rico Rolleri when asked to comment on the status of the team.

Yet Coach Douglas was not alone with help from the team's three co-captains Craig Moraes, Kevin Slauson, and Rico Rolleri.

Yet what game was exciting without an audience for support?

"We've had more support from the school these last two years," said Kevin Slauson(25), "it's a change for the better."

Ready or not - Donald Jewell and Kevin Slauson prepare to recover the ball.

Airborne - As Rico Rolleri enters the last steps of his lay-up, the pressure is on "My goal is to be in division one in college basketball," said Rolleri.

Eight grades later and Rolleri is now just learning to control his speed and left-hand dribble, which goes to show how much practice is needed to get to the top.

Aqua Women

With the pool heating system down the first two weeks of school, the women's varsity swim team was off to a slow start. Yet time lost was not damaging to their performance.

"We have strong newcomers and a lot of returning AHS swimmers. I feel we are a strong team this year," said Jill Wootten, who has been swimming for five years.

With one of the youngest varsity swim teams, we lack no pride or prestige. "I feel the self discipline will take the team far this year," said Michele Gilchrist.

"I feel the young team members can meet our physical and mental demands this year," said Wootten.

"For as young as we are, we have a strong team," added Gilchrist.

Many of the team members swim outside of school and have been doing so for many years, thus giving us the extra experience needed.

Swimming shouldn't be taken lightly; it is a sport of endurance and stamina. "It's more than just lap to lap," said Wootten.

When asked what motivates the team, Gilchist replied, "You get out of the sport what you put in to it."

When talking about the younger varisty swimmers, Karly Reed added that the team had moved into a new league due to Carrie Poter's back stroke. "I was born a water baby," said Porter, laughing.

Shannon Howes, a commonly mentioned name among AHS swimmers, was on the 1988-89 women's varsity swim team.

Howes, whose daily schedule demands many hours in the pool, swims every day from 5:30am to 7am. Then she attends classes, and goes back to the pool from 4pm to 7pm.

"It keeps me in shape," explains Howes, who has been swimming for fourteen years. "It gives me a lot of time to think."

Howes explains that the meets are a break from the everyday workout and that it is fun to be with different groups of people.

Howes competes in all the races, but says that the 400IM (Individual Medley) 200IM, 100 back, and the 200 back are the races she swims best.

"It depends on how important the meet is," says Howes, explaining the mental preparation, "but you always need a positive attitude."

Women Slam WESAL

The noise of a basketball game reverberated against the edifices in the immediate vicinity of their gym. The mighty hornets were in the process of defeating St. Elizabeth. Although the spectator turn-out was few, yells and cheers of the individuals who were present were just as loud as if the whole AHS student body was present.

Huffing and puffing was just beginning to be apparent as the various players ran up and down the court. The varsity players used extensive, strategic methods to slam or lob the ball to its final destination—the basket. D'Karla Davis ran like a bullet out of a 12-gauge shotgun from opposite sides of the court, keeping the ball controlled. Davis, making all these crucial decisions in her head, launched the ball to other heavily-skilled and disciplined players such as Jennifer McDonald, Dana Murray, or Robin Derickson.

As the fabulous and energetic match between two awesome schools continued its course, the AHS team showed no signs of giving up. Instead, they pounded the opposing team, trying valiantly to intimidate them.

Louder than the roar of a military fighterjet, "GO HORNETS!!" or "GIVE IT TO 'EM!!" were comman cheers amongst the spectators, giving the them an enforced positive attitude of the team as a family.

"Family," that was what counted in a winning streak. "Attitude is super ... true to the motto as being a family," asserted Coach Brad Thomas, the head coach of the varsity team. "Captains Jennifer McDonald, Nikki Freeze, and Dana Murray are keeping it together."

And if that wasn't enough, Coach Tom Saxton expressed, "We will accomplish more because we have a more balanced team. Make first place in the league!"

Through the player's point of view, Captain Dana Murray emphasized, "I want to move my goals up: to be more of an all-around player and to get better stats."

Captain Nikki Freeze added, "The team has a better attitude—more of a family. Our goal is to win North Coast (NCS)!"

Gazing in surprise. - Varsity Coach Brad Thomas consults his clipboard while JV Coach Joe Baca stares at the scoreboard. Both have played basketball during their high school years.

Dana has stay at this she earned the name to be captain of the team as a junior. Her improvement in the basketball area was just part of it. Her defensive and offensive skills improved dramatically, as was shown during her contribution in the matches. As years went by, her agility and her fluency in basketball improved substantially.

She plans to continue basketball through college

Foot Art In Action

Soccer, a more skilled sport than many others, is not well known to us here in the US. "In other countries it is basically the only sport around that everyone can play. Croquet, Cricket, and Rugby, are all sports that need a good knowledge of rules," said Josh Borof.

Stumbling to get the ball, running circles around your opponent to get away; you shoot and score! This is the difficult task in soccer: to dribble the ball while running and looking up to see where people are on the field.

"I love to slide tackle someone and get them dirty, just to let them know I am there hanging around," Robin Van Valkenburg said with a smile on his face.

Soccer is just as exciting and dangerous as any other sport. "I broke my nose once while trying to head the ball and then felt flat on my back!", said Borof.

Being confused on the soccer field can be an easy state of mind for most. One minute you have the ball the next someone can be on the other side of the field with it. "Once I was playing fullback and I had been beaten, but I reached down to touch the ball because I was used to playing goalie. After that the referee laughed at me and didn't even call me for it," Van Valkenburg stated.

Running, falling, giving soccer their all, our men's soccer team is trying their hardest to make soccer as popular as any other sport. "In the US there are a number of games that kids play, baseball, football, and basketball. All of which just doesn't give soccer a chance to grow," said Borof.

Soccer isn't just a sport, it's an art form. —by Susie Profumo

Robin Van Valkenburg, a soccer player for five years now, can usually be found slide tackling his opponents. He claims it's his favorite legal thing to do on the field.

Van Valkenburg usually plays center forward. "I would rather play center halfback. I have a better speed for center half than I do for center forward."

Van Valkenburg likes to play soccer for many reasons.

"I got tired of playing football and getting hurt, and not to mention that soccer will get me in shape for my spring season."

Soccer is a difficult sport to play. Van Valkenburg says the hardest game he has ever played was against Ygnacio Valley, because he had to play an unfamiliar position and the other team was much better than his team was. Soccer, although not as popular as other sports, some feel it is a more physical sport than others.

Overall, Van Valkenburg considers soccer a difficult sport.

Dance Anyone? - Pal Perris chuckles as he tries to stay on his feet after kicking the ball. Perris is an exchange student.

Dribble, pass and score! - Tony Nguyen and Mike Osmani use there team work to dribble the ball down the field to the goal.

Energetic! Ecstatic!

Soccer isn't an easy game, but to most spectators the game is a breeze. In retrospect to that opinion, the women's soccer team of AHS proved to me that it isn't just anyone's game. If you want to win, working as a team is what it's all about and that's what they do best.

This year's team is of a whole different league, unlike the 1987-88 team. In all respects though, AHS is proving themselves not to be last year's equals, but instead, their superiors.

"We're looking pretty good. We've really improved since Christmas", said Coach John Maiers. Before Christmas, AHS lost a game to Bishop O'Dowd but on January 19th, AHS challenged them once again. This time AHS won 4-0.

To became the best, AHS had to defeat Bishop O'Dowd twice in a row to get into the championships. Since O'Dowd wouldn't go willingly to that "Great Lockeroom in the Sky", AHS had its hands full. Coach Maiers placed a lot of training, effort, and patience into his team and believed that it would all pay off.

When asked about team morale, Hamblin commented that, "I think that we all have really good enthusiasm and spirit." As for the "Taste of Victory", she said that it's just "indescribable". The taste should have been sweet because by January 12th, AHS had six victories to two losses overall. In the league, they had four wins and only one loss.

So Cool They're Ho

With victories in the singles and doubles division at North Coast last year, the men's tennis team has undoubtedly established a reputation of excellence that has followed them into this season.

This year's team continued their strong determination and spirit as they were led by team captains Craig Boring, Ricky Keiser, and Billy Tsai.

Coach Dave Fairfield believed that this year's team was led by a great deal of internal leadership which was evident in the fact that team members could be seen sixth period and well into the afternoon perfecting their game to the level expected of them.

Returning members to the team, such as Mike Lee, Sean Martin, and Sydney Yee have also proven an asset to this year's younger team.

"The team has a lot of depth but lack talented players such as Felix Gomez and Danny Truong. Despite this, we're going to have a winning season because of team pride and raw talents from Sydney Yee and Sean Martin. I believe that we should have had more audience and support from the school and especially from Dr. Wheelwright," commented Lee.

Raw talent and team pride were the basis of this winning team who were described by Coach Fairfield in this way: "If I were to describe this team in one word, it would be iceberg: ten percent of its potential above water and ninety percent below." Ice or no ice, this is one cool team that heated up the courts with their game. — by Monika Chin

Run Like The Wind

I didn't know how much hard work track could be. Just the first week was rough enough to begin with. Talk about torture.

As sore as I was, I decided to ask why Jennifer Kennedy and Lizzy Wong joined the track team.

"I joined track because I like to run. I like sports that have to do with running," said Kennedy, who seemed to be pleased to be asked.

"I joined track because it's an extremely active event, and it's full of fun and excitement," replied Wong who enjoys running.

As I wandered around the track at the Alameda College searching for somebody to interview, I looked around and saw everybody striving to do their best even though it was only practice. Even the coaches were working out with us which didn't surprise me at all. When I saw two track members talking, I decided to catch up with them and ask them if they planned to take track in the future and why.

"Yes! Not many people like to run for pleasure, but I take great pleasure out of it!" said Jenny Snider, who is a great athlete.

"No! Because it's to excruciating work plus too much pain," replied Ryan Holder.

As the day grew to a close, I felt the soreness wear away from my legs while I stretched with the team knowing that I was used to the hard work of track and also looking quite forward to our first track meet. —Tara Areola

Geronmol - Aimee Smith jumps into the pit and tries to score for Sierra as a member of the women's soccer team.

Born to run

I didn't know that much about cross country but I did know that it was a sport in which you did a lot of runnning. I wanted to know more information about the sport so I interviewed members of the cross country team. I asked two runners from cross country why they joined.

"I joined cross country because I figured you would have lots of hard workouts and that later on at the meets all that work would pay off at the finish line," replied Jenny Snider.

"I joined for the exercise and to improve my running," said Victor Baquero.

When I asked Lisa Inman how running made her feel better, she said that it wakes her up, gives her more energy, and that it relieves tension.

"When I finish a run I feel good knowing that I saw it to the end and I pushed myself," replied Jeff DeWolf proudly.

For practice the cross country team runs from the school, to the point in Bay Farm, and then back to the school again. "It's about five miles," said DeWolf.

The run for their meets are about three miles. I asked Chris Kelly what was more important running the fastest or just finishing the race. "I'd rather finish than be a quitter," said Kelly.

I had received all the answers that I needed to know about cross country. It seems like a hard and competitive sport, but a fun sport at the same time if you enjoy running and doing a lot of hard workouts. —by Jen Matsuoka

Spiritually Enlightened

Most of the varsity and junior varsity rally squads went to Santa Cruz during summer for Cheerleading Camp. There, they won trophies and documents for their great performances.

"Camp made me feel confident. It gave me more experience in cheering. It also made me spirited," said Julia Lee.

What did they get out of it all?

"Cheering is fun and I like to support the teams. I like to get the school spirited," replied Monisa Houston.

But some students found that the camp went beyond what they had expected.

"I learned to get along with others, how to accept learning in a positive way, and to be more patient," said Michelle Lim.

Mrs. Brenda Frenchwood, known as "the bookroom lady" became "mama" to the squads.

"She's very organized. Her being close with us makes us close to her. She's always there for us and that made us a team," said BeeJay Funk.

The Spirit Stick was the most honored of all awards. The stick was given each night, but had to be returned, except if earned on the last day.

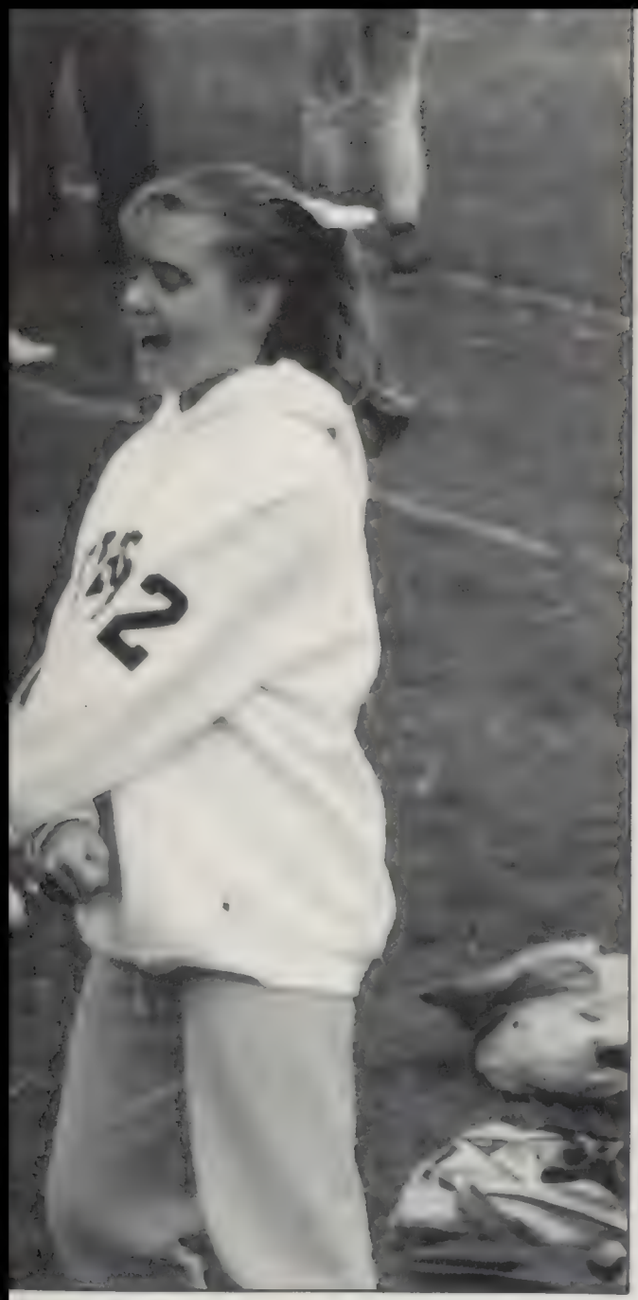

The Fall squads earned the stick the first two nights of their stay there, but didn't get to bring it home.

"I felt proud of our squad. We put everything we had into winning, and we did. This brought our squad together," said Christine Collins.—by Veronica Armstrong

1988-89 Varsity Cheerleading and Pom-Pon Squads - First row: Stacey Wong, Su Kim, Elizabeth Rawlyk, Christine Collins, Monisa Houston, Renee Thieme, BeeJay Funk, Lilybell David. Second row: Dayatra Miller, Kristen Gardner, Shannon Miner, Suzy Oram, Jill Freistroffer, Angie Carmagnani, Stacey Graves, Nicole Humphries, Liz Isaeff.

Nicole is her name and dancing is her game. She's a successful but busy dancer who made what she is today on her own. Four classes a week at the Alameda School of Dance, started just about everything.

It all began in the fourth grade, when Nicole Humphries started to take dance and jazz classes "just for fun". Ever since, she has been doing two shows a year. Humphries is on the varsity pom-pon squad, where she is able to perform in front of the crowds at games.

During summer, Humphries visited a cheerleading camp and was pulled over to the side by one of the USA Staff Members, who had told her that she was one of the 'stand-outs' of the group.

"Too many things to do with not enough time to do them in," says Nicole Humphries. She's a senior already, but doesn't know where all her time went. With the many interesting things that Humphries does in her life, she has no one to blame.

Cheers and Jeers

If you were one of those people that went to every football and basketball game of the season and noticed the cheerleading and pom-pon squads of Alameda High showing their stuff, you should have also noticed the difference between the fall and spring squads.

During the football season in fall, each division of freshman, junior varsity and varsity squad had to separate cheerleading and pom-pon lines. In spring, the junior varsity squad had to unite into one team because of the loss of several girls. The girls were asked why they left the squad during spring.

"The spring schedule is a lot busier with two to three games a week. I wanted to concentrate more on school work," said Stacey Wong.

Cheering interfered with school work only for a few people though.

"Cheering doesn't take me away from my school work because I do that at night," said Su Kim.

So it all boils down to cheering in spring is just as fun, if not more, as cheering in the fall.

"The funnest part of cheering was making the crowd spirited and rowdy. Well, to stir up the crowd and meet other cheerleaders from other schools," said Michelle Lim.

"I was cheering in the bleachers and my foot got caught in between the seats and I fell. When I got up and looked back, the opposing teams' audience was laughing at me. I was more embarrassed than hurt," said Linda Su Kim. —by Veronica Armstrong

To the faculty, Mrs. Brenda Frenchwood is the most dependable textbook keeper that we've ever had, but to a group of energetic girls, she's Mama," their cheerleading coach.

But Frenchwood's importance to the teachers is not what this story was meant for. Not only was she a friend to many students in school, Frenchwood was also the new cheerleading advisor. Sound easy? Think again.

"The support that I got from my husband and sons kept me going," said Frenchwood.

Being friends with squad members looked like it would make things easier on Frenchwood to guide them.

"It definitely didn't make it easier. I counseled and guided them," said Frenchwood.

"The good part was that I got to share the best years of their lives, but the hard part was to guide the best and hold them. It was the sharing and the trusting. It reminded me of when I was in high school," declared Frenchwood.

Leadership in Action

Coaches, the most important part of any team, are usually the most forgotten because of that 'star player.' These are the men and women that are behind the scenes and make everything come together as one.

Dan Reynolds has been coaching both football and baseball for five years at AHS. The sport he enjoys coaching the most is football, but he loves a good game of basketball for relaxation.

"I don't really have to enforce it because the players are a little intimidated by my aggressive nature," he said when asked about team discipline.

Reynolds demands a rigorous schedule of his team.

"We start with weightlifting during the summer months so the players can get to know each other. Then when the season starts I give lots of encouragement to the players. I get to know the players their friends and their parents. We have a captain of the week program were a different player gets to be captain for a week," replied Reynolds when I asked him about how he instilled team spirit in his players.

"It's the players' responsibility, I'm not going to babysit or constantly check with the teachers for my players. If they have a problem, I will gladly talk to that player and try to solve the problem as best, I can. I do receive weekly grade sheets. But it is mostly up to the player and how much he wants to stay on the team," said Yamanski about grades and players.

Mary Curry the swimming coach had a lot to tell me about her coaching ability. Curry has been coaching womens JV and varsity swimming for 20 years.

"I would say that my relationship with my players varies with each person. Team members say as a whole I'm just like a mother to them," Curry answered when I asked about her relationship with her players.

Felix Douglas, basketball coach, has been with the AHS family for eight years.

"I let them know that playing is a privilege, not a right. They know that how they play is an impact on the school, and to be the best they can be," said Douglas when asked about instilling team spirit in his players.

"Every player is behind the other, no one is singled out by themselves. Each player should know that there is someone behind him to back him up when he is in trouble."
replied Douglas when the subject making the team work as a unit came up."

Bold Bashers

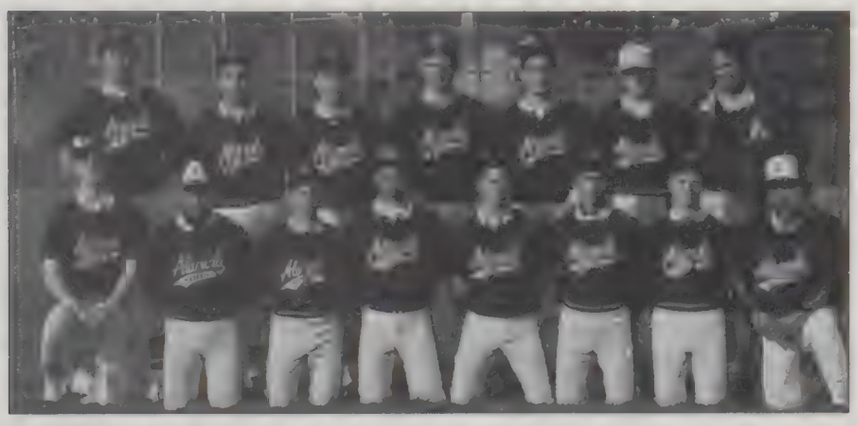

"One, two, three strikes you're out!" When people think of the All-American sport, baseball, this is what often pops into their mind. What is it about stealing bases, hitting homers, and pickling that attracts people of all ages?

"It is an easy sport to relate to, slower than basketball or football," said Tamer Francis.

Baseball has been a favorite sport in America at least since the late 1800's. From Spring to Fall, the most popular American tune is, "Let's go to the ball game."

"Pitching is the best position because you control the tempo of the game. My favorite one, though, is shortstop because that position demands the use of all you physical abilities," said Jahan Kaccem.

Well, from 1904 when Jack Chesbro won 41 games in 1988 and Jose Conseco with his stolen bases and all of his homers, there has been changed rules, equipment, and different aspirations and different intentions in the game of baseball. Even though baseball has changed in some respects, it will never change in the fact that everybody loves it when a ball is hit out of the field or when the visiting team is struck out. —Nicole Sproles

Bashing Batters

"A majority of the public like physical contact and pain. I think that's what really attracts them," said Tamer Francis, outfielder, when asked why baseball is not as popular as football.

"If you don't stick together like a family, and there's no cooperation, what you have is a bunch of people, not a team," said Francis.

Even though baseball is not quite as popular as football, it holds just as much interest during it's season. In other words, if the two were during the same season, baseball would be lost.

Global Enterprises

Clubs, clubs, everywhere! With a club or two for every conceivable interest and then some, AHS was the perfect place for pursuing one's extracurricular interests. If you couldn't get into the class, you could get into the club. You could even start your own. All you needed was a faculty advisor and a "constitution", a document stating the purpose of your club.

We've certainly come a long way since the Seventies, when the Disco Club met Wednesdays at noon and the Trekkie Club had meetings every Thursday. Today, our clubs have evolved with the times. For example, the Computer Club has replaced the Abacus Club, and instead of Latin, we have the French and Spanish clubs.

Some clubs exist purely for fun. Others, like Arriba España, Bon Voyage, and Aventura Mexicana, go to Europe and Mexico. Still others, like CSF and Speech, can be listed on your transcript.

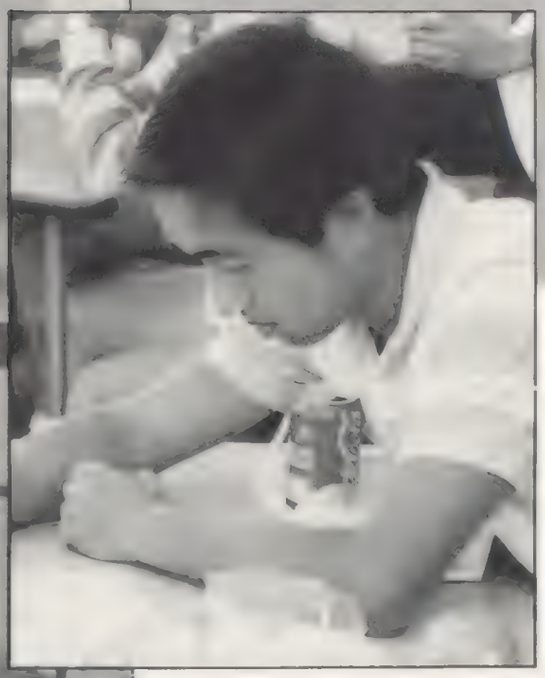

Clubs provide a much-needed break from a busy schedule and give people the opportunity to spend time with others who share common interests.

"You have something to identify with and a cause to divert your attention to," said Rachel Loui, "I feel great because I know that at least one person shares my interests."

Clubs can also be important in social development. "They give kids a chance to do things together outside of the classroom," said Speech Club advisor Mr. Del Martin, "they can explore the interests they already have and develop new ones."—by Julia Berger come one, come all

As I walked down the hall, I noticed students carrying tables and chairs, reminding me that today was Club Day. I was really nervous, since it was my first interview, so I decided to join the festivities and calm my nerves. As I got closer, I saw hoardes of friendly-looking people luring me to the circle.

Booths with big, colorful signs urged students to join the various clubs, including the Asian Club, Spanish Club, Fashion Club, Art Club, and C.S.F.

A huge banner emblazoned with "Multi-Racial Club" caught my eye. I sauntered over to meet Ed Angle, the club's advisor.

"Our goal is to help people against racism," said Angle, who was pleased that I was interested in his club.

As I watched students line up for club membership, I talked to Sherrelle Peten, who seemed to be signing up for everything. But why?

"To be involved in school activities," she said excitedly.

"To get more experince," said Erika Moore who was quite excited about me asking her.

"So I can evolve and use the things I learned in the clubs to enrich my future status," added LaVora Monique Perry.

"I join clubs so it can look good on my college application and also meet new friends." said Carmen Leong.

the not-so-typical club meeting

Club meeting- (noun) 1. a gathering of students sharing similar interests; partaking in varied activities; particularly eating lunch.

Were club meetings just another group of students eating and socializing? Enquiring minds wanted to know; I wanted to know!

I wandered the halls aimlessly that bleak January day, trying to answer that burning question. I envisioned the ordinary scenario: some people stuffing sandwiches into hungry mouths, others doing homework for fifth period. Exciting? I think not.

I sighed, thinking of the boring story that lay ahead, when suddenly . . .

"Hooray!"

What was this? Someone actually finding excitement during lunch? What was causing such a hubbub? A ham sandwich on rye? Salami on sourdough? I had to find out.

Peeking through the small safety glass window on Dr. Susan Paden's door, I saw small clans of students frantically connecting marshmallows and toothpicks.

"The tallest marshmallow tower wins!" shouted Dr. Paden as she raised her forefinger in the air.

Tired of the bland, day-to-day lunch times, the Science Club organized an octathalon of events, including such events as marshmallow towers, mousetrap cars, balloon rockets and paper airplanes, making for an interesting and amusing lunch period.

"You get to enjoy different activities, have fun and relax," said Science Club member Young Yoo.

And to think that I believed club meetings were ordinary!?! Curious, I continued the trek throughout that week and was surprised to discover even more late-breaking news.

The Asian Club's meeting was packed with students, many of whom were prime candidates for the infamous Asian Club Scholarship. During their lunch time conferences, they discussed fundraisers and upcoming trips.

Member David Chan revealed an important aspect of the club.

"Being at the Asian Club meetings increases your ethnic awareness," Chan confessed as he thoughtfully placed his thumb on his chin.

It seemed that club meetings were much more than what I first envisioned them to be. From planning trips to building marshmallow towers, there were much more activities available than just feeding your face. No, we were not doomed to suffer the painful boredom of another typical club meeting. In fact, the word 'typical' lost its meaning after I witnessed twenty or so Science Club groupies playing with toothpicks and stay-puffed marshmallows.

Whether your interests ranged from toothpicks to trips, "increasing ethnic awareness" or just organizing events, club meetings provided the breeding ground for all your lunch time needs. Club meetings, I saw, were not just a job, but an adventure. —by Precious Costales peers in publications

The life of an Oak Leaf staffer isn't exactly nonstop fun and games, but the relaxed atmosphere of the journalism room makes it seem as if it is.

"There really isn't that much stress unless you're an editor or if you can't finish your story by the time it has to be on ASCII (a computer code)," said Rene Paik.

Another staff member had a very different idea on the subject all too familiar to any publications student: stress. In addition to regular schoolwork, deadlines added extra pressures that were above and beyond the call of duty.

"A lot of time is kickback, where we just fool around. But when deadlines come, all hell breaks loose. I'm a writer and a photographer, and if I don't balance my time, I'm in a lot of trouble. Sometimes we might have to stay after school four or five hours to finish what we started," said Greg Risling.

Published approximately every three weeks, getting the Oak Leaf out on time required a good deal of teamwork. The responsibilities of interviewing, writing, typing, and editing were shared by all.

"Teamwork plays a big part, because if one person doesn't have their story in, then the whole layout has to be changed," said Paik.

Many of the staffers decided to join the school newspaper because it would be their first step on their way to a career in journalism.

"I have known for some time that I have wanted a career in journalism, so being on the Oak Leaf staff was a logical step," said Nicholas Hass.

marching to a new beat

Alameda High has been through a lot of changes over the years. This year Ellie Perry has taken over the duties of the music department. Perry has been teaching music since she was thirteen years old. She has made some changes and kept up some old traditions.

"We're trying to introduce new kinds of performing groups to involve new students," said Perry. She added, "It's a growing stage right now. That's what makes it so neat. We can make it into anything we want to."

This year there were two drum majors instead of one. Garth Smith, who plays every brass instrument except the tuba, has played for seven years, and was drum major for field competition. Smith is planning to become a marching instructor. Clover Mow, who played the flute for six years, was drum majorette for street competition. Both came new to Alameda's band last year from bigger bands.

"It was a lot different," as Mow describes coming to a new band, "a smaller band takes a lot of adjusting."

Smith also performed with the Blue Devils Drum and Bugle Corps, which has 250 people in their band. The two drum majors felt Perry has a good job with the band.

For most of the musicans this was not their first year. Catalina Hurtado, who played the flute and percussion has been involved in music for eleven years.

"I think music is essential to life," said Hurtado, "it makes me a better person."

The common feeling of the students of the band is not to go into the music profession, but to keep their skills. But who's to tell? Alameda High has been through a lot of changes over the years. —L.Dodson-Partida for fame or for fun

"I always sang in the shower and so I figured why not sing in the school choir," explained Steve Bickel, who sings in the bass section of the jazz choir. Some students joined the choir just for fun and others were more serious about singing; however, it was a good experience and a lot of fun for all regardless of whether they want to become professional singers, or because they loved to sing.

Alameda High School had two choirs which were taught by Ellie Perry. First period there was the mixed chorus. Fourth period was the "jazz choir".

Both groups have been singing a lot of sixties music which they have seemed to thoroughly enjoy.

"California dreamin' and 'Lolly Pop' are my favorite songs to sing," exclaimed Greg Risling. Dennis Aman enjoyed singing swing, jazz, and contemporary music.

When students were asked why they decided to join choir they replied with several different reasons.

"I liked singing and everybody told me that I should join, so I dropped Spanish for singing," replied Melissa Bray who is a soprano in the jazz choir. I wondered if any of the students planned on singing for their career. "No, but I plan to have a career playing contemporary music on the bass with my band, 'The Object Lesson'," said bass singer in the jazz choir, Dennis Aman.

"I'd like to have a singing career but I'm a procrastinator," replied Margaret Jarvis, a soprano in the jazz choir.

drama, a thespian family

I walked into the Little Theater, trying to be discreet so that I wouldn't disturb the rehearsal for the fall play. Though the actors had only been rehearsing for about a week, they had already begun to develop great characters.

"It's great, it brings everyone close together, and when you screw up everyone doesn't get pissed off," claimed comedian Sam Louis.

The actors on stage, however, were not the only "family members" working on the play. The students who were not cast in parts worked on sets, costuming, sound, and helping out on the nights of the performance.

In the production class the students are more like a family, and actress Eva Hageman had something to say about that.

"When you become a family people are there for you. It helps when you are friends with the other actors so that you can interact with them better on stage," said Hageman.

When asked if drama was in their future, a couple of students were sure that it would be.

"Yeah, because if I wasn't performing I wouldn't be happy," exclaimed Drea Campbell.

"Yes I want to go to a good performing arts school and act in live theater," stated Jill Anne Miller, who starred as Anne Frank in the fall play.

I wondered if Richard Bunker had a favorite role that he had played and why.

"Nick Bottom from Mid Summer Night's Dream because I got to act as silly as I am and people clapped for it," exclaimed Bunker with amusement.

I think the reason that AHS has such a fine troupe is the fact that the members treat one another with respect and concern as if they were a family. There is also a lot of great talent and superb directing by Fred Chacon.—by Molly Brownson

Room 31 is just another empty space left unopened and vacant in the many hallways of AHS. Or is it? You may see Mr. Fischer's English classes conducted there if you steal a glance. However, when the ominmous clock on the wall strikes 11 a.m., you'll notice something different. No, this isn't the Twilight Zone. It's a class called Leadership.

Leadership is a class where many activities within the school are organized and carried out. Dances, blood drives, senior activities, and fundraisers are just a handful of the functions performed by these well integrated students. It may seem like a burden, yet for Rick Keiser, Student Body President, it's a different story. "It is very fulfilling to me. It gives me something to suceed at."

Leadership may appear as a facade of popular social butterflies, however, the class is just another aspect of high school, where one learns about himself as well as his peers and future goals.

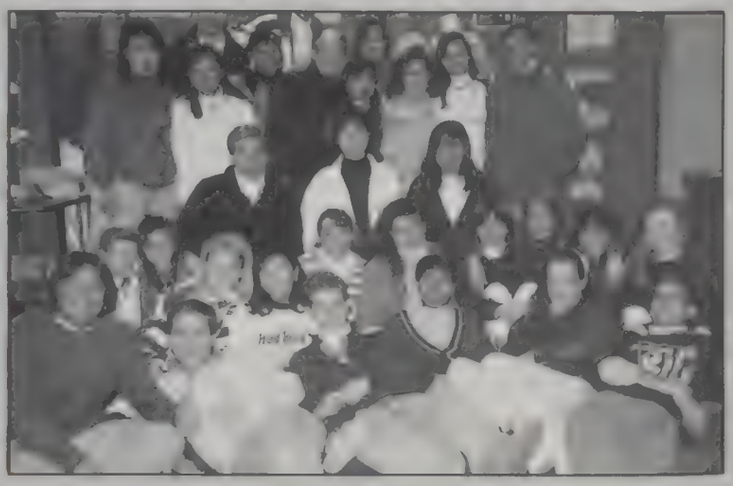

"Leadership has changed my life. My career goals have changed. Not only has leadership inspired me, I've learned more about people. It has allowed me to see other's strengths, weaknesses, and insecurities," beams Henry Lin.

Working together as a class allow the students to become close. Friendships allow leadership to work in a comfortable atmosphere.

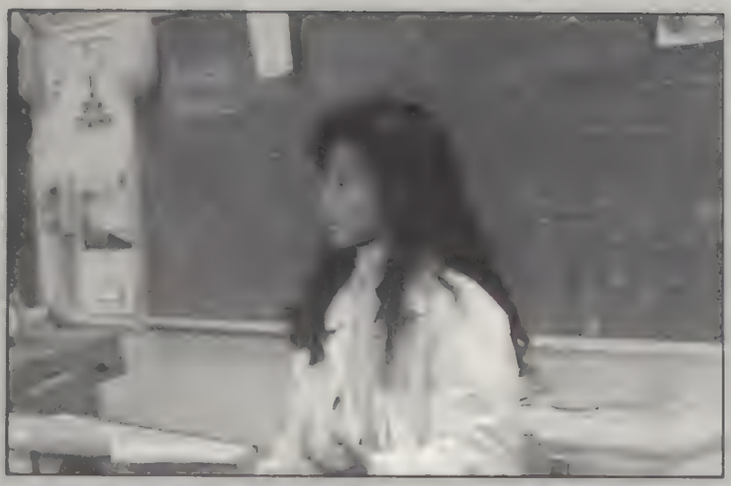

A close knit relationship exsists between the dynamic class and the faculty to ensure the benifit of the organization and the well being of the students. The activities that Leadership organize are for the students at Alameda. Leadership exists whether you notice it or not. It always will in high school as well as life itself. Being a leader takes a lot of work and inspiratation. It builds your personality to it's limits. —by Ray Kang il etait une bonne vacances

Paris. The Louvre. The Eiffel Tower. Eight students and one teacher were lucky enough to experience all this and more as participants in the annual trip to France of the Bon Voyage Club. Advised by Ms. Julie Roemer, the group spent two weeks living in the homes of French host families in the town of Romans, and another week in Paris.

"They (the family) took me right in. I felt like I was a member of the family. They loved to try to communicate with me through their son (who was enrolled in an English class) especially in learning the names of kitchen utensils," said Ryan Dodds.

The objective of the club was to emmerse the students in French culture and to improve their conversational skills.

"My family didn't speak great English so I had to pick up French pretty fast," said Dodds.

French culture is very differnt from American in many respects, but there are many American-inspired fads. Much of the popular music is English, shows like Cosby are dubbed in French, cowboy-type clothing is all the rage and "The discoteques are really discos!" said Stacey Wong. "There were mirrored balls, and we saw a guy in a white polyester suit doing John Travolta."

Of course, missing three weeks worth of school was a vacation, but it had its price. A lot of work had to be made up in a short time.

"I had to make up a lot of the work I couldn't have done while I was on the trip, like labs in Chemistry," said Wong.

making dough: to spain we go

Group: Arriba España. Destination: you guessed it, Spain. Unlike the previous year, Arriba España, advised by Mrs. Ruth Romero-Ávila, planned to go to France and England, as well. Even though some members joined because they thought of it as a great opportunity to shop, education was sure to make its way in there somehow.

"This year's trip is going to be very fun, but it's going going to be educational as well," stated Romero-Ávila.

Because of the wide variation of cultures and languages that were going to be experienced during their summer adventure, cooperation was going to have to be an attitude that existed in everyone.

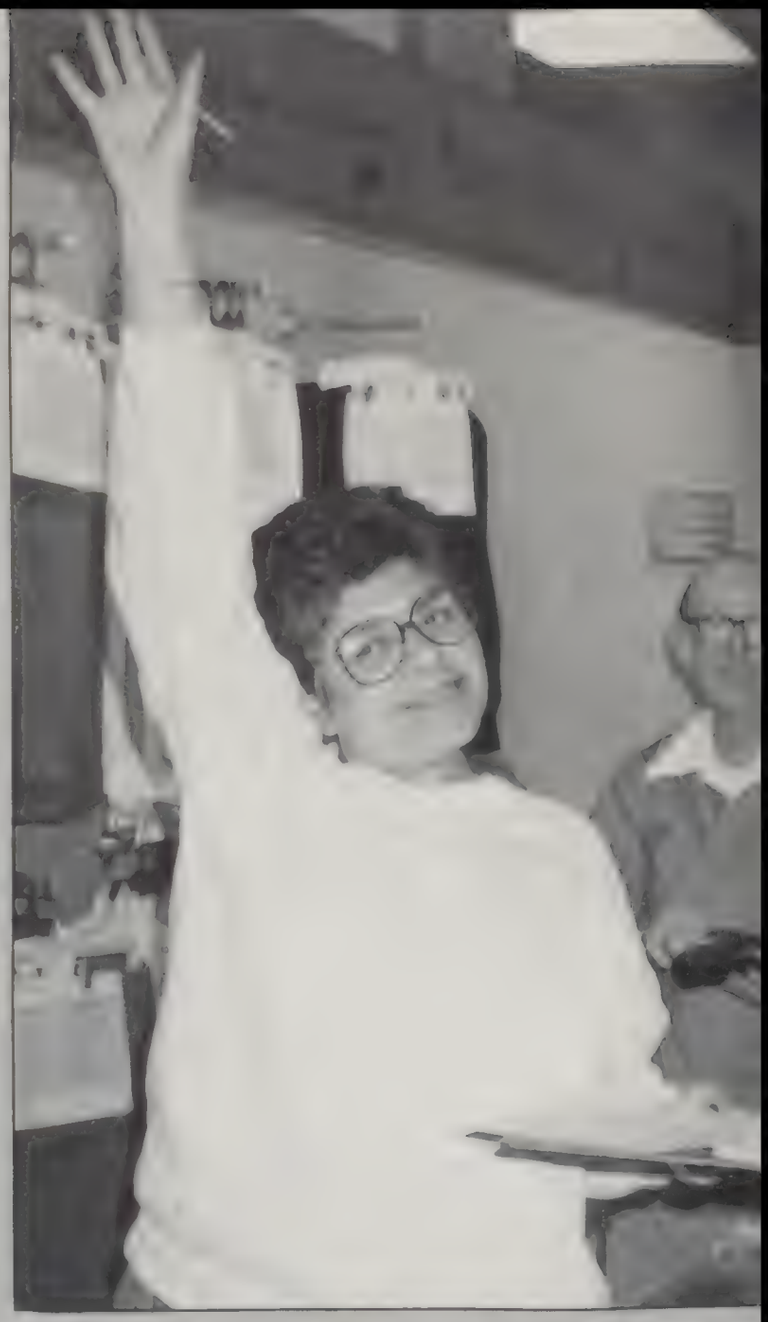

Linda Sae Jang, said, "When we're in Spain, if the Spanish speaking students will help me, I will help them in France. It's going to have to be an equal trade," Sae Jang added.

During the meetings, ideas for fundraising was the subject most widely discussed. Their ideas were designed to make as much money as they could, because going to Europe could be a little costly.

"The most practical idea we came up with was the skate-a-thon. It was an easy way to make a lot of dough," said Danielle Yee as she continued eating her lunch during one of the many lunch-time meetings.

Among the other ideas discussed were a yard sale, a raffle, taking inventory at Capwell's, and the infamous LOLLY POP SALE (I'm sure you know what I mean).

After all of the hard work, the group was curious if it all was going to be worth it; but, pardon the cliché, experience is the best teacher, so they would have to find it out for themselves. —by DeWayne Crone

broadening horizons

For some of the members of Close Up, advised by Gary Haberberger, the primary goal was to see the sights of Washington D.C.; nevertheless, there was a much wider variety of expectations among the other club members.

"I decided to join Close Up because I like history, and I really wanted to learn more," replied Bonnie Oviatt.

Oviatt's expectations were definately met on the trip. The major lesson that the members were taught, was the real life pressures involved in the creation of foreign policy, which they themselves had to deal with in a simulated version of the making of foreign policy. In this activity, each member portrayed a certain world leader. Among the people involved were the world renowned Deboah Jew, the trade minister of Angola; Christina Chin, the advisor to the president of El Salvador; and Catalina Hurtado, the leader of the Guerilla rebel armed forces in El Salvador.

The Vietnam Memorial, the Washington Monument, and the Pentagon were only a few of the many beautiful monuments visited by the group on the trip.

"The Vietnam Memorial gave me a strong feeling of pride and patriotism, and I was really touched," said Catalina Hurtado. "But if I see the Washington Monument one more time, I'm going to scream!" adds Hurtado giggling uncontrollably.

As we know, most of the teenagers in the United States have never had the opportunity of visiting our nation's beloved capital; therefore, Bonnie Oviatt would like to leave the reader on a very brief note.

a new beginning

Echoing with the squeak of sneakers and the thud of basketballs, the gym was alive with excitement. I entered the gym in the midst of a heated volleyball game between Asian Club and Oakland High's Key Club. Several club members participated in a little interclub competition by playing basketball and volleyball on October 18 at "Gym Night". Key Club and the Asian Student's Union from Oakland High were invited as guests to AHS's gym night to increase good interclub relationships. Gym night was one of the many activities aimed at bringing the members closer together.

Asian Club had faced a troubled future this year due to a change in sponsor. But luckily, the club was able to resume its productivity with the help of the members and their new sponsor, Ms. Kameny. This year the club focused on trying to pull itself back together.

Although Asian Club may have not been able to accomplish all their set goals, it has been able to earn some recognition and pride among its members. The annual faculty luncheon had earned a good reputation among the teachers at AHS.

"I loved the food," said Ms. Kyle."I thought the food was really delicious. There was a nice variety and enough of it.

Many members feel the need for changes for the benefit of the welfare of the club.

"It would be great if there was more community service for the Asian community. That's what it should be for. I don't think it should be centered around Asians, but that it would be great to see other people in our club." stated Monika Chin.

Although gym night has been only one step towards bettering the Asian Club's and interclub relationships, in the future Asian Club hopes that these types of events will be done in a regular fashion. Asian Club also hopes to promote the welfare of the Asian community.—by Stacey Wong

Classifieds

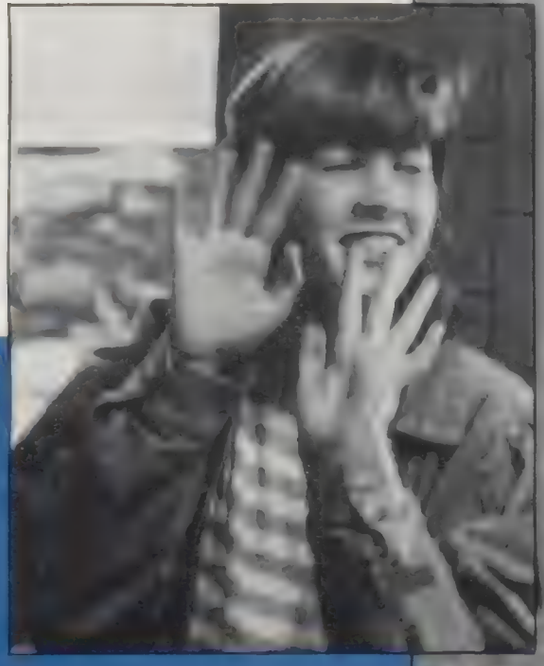

Well folks, this is it. Without the money earned from advertisements, both business and personal, there would be no color in the book and it probably wouldn't come out until September.

Although most people don't know it when they're writing out their check to "Alameda High School," they're not only buying an ad for themselves but they're also supporting the Yearbook Class and the school.

"It makes me feel like the school is appreciated," said Jason Ho.

Spring delivery would be next to impossible, color would be out of the question, and you know that little border around each picture? Well, we wouldn't be able to afford that either, without the revenue collected from ads.

Remember: A good yearbook is the sign of a strong school. Thank you to all those who helped support us.—by Julia Berger

Eric,

You are a special person and you deserve only the best. I LOVE YOU FOREVER and I wish you all the happiness in your years to come. But you'll never find peace in mind until you listen to your heart.

Love and Pain
Love lasts forever
Pain a short time
Love will never fade.
Pain stays in your mind Oh, don't let your love astray For pain will never go away So when he says no
Remember the love you shared and let him go
For love lasts forever
Pain a short time
They're both going to hurt you and stay in your mind.

BEST OF LUCK TO THE CLASS OF 89!

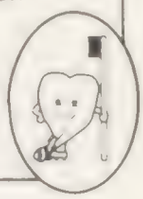

I would like to thank the student body and the faculty at AHS for three wonderful years. My three years here were not only fun but also a great cultural experience for me. I wish the class of 1989 all the luck in the world and although I will not graduate as part of AHS's class of '89, I will always consider myself as part of this class and I hope others will too Ms. Z, like I always said you taught me how to write and Ms. G taught me how to speak. Mr. G, thanks for teaching me how to research. Mr. H, you taught me great study skills. Tyler, you are a true friend. The 1988 yearbook staff was great! Go Hornets. Ali (Al) Manbeian

DEADLINE!

In the past, the yearbook page copy has always been about, and I quote," . . . pulling together to create our dream." Profound, no?

But I feel that this year, more than any other, that worn out saying was the profound truth. The staff was comprised of a representative member from every conceivable facet of student life. This provided us with every point of view, so that we would be able to produce a yearbook that would appeal to everyone. We tried to feature and picture as many different people as possible. Each page was constructed with this purpose in mind. That's why we didn't interview only the quarterback. Everyone had something to say, and we tried our hardest to let everyone be heard.

Also, contrary to popular belief, Yearbook is a real class for a very real grade.

"I thought it would be an easy "A". And then I found out you have to work to get an "A". But it's fun at the same time," said Leesa Dodson-Partida.

Deadlines had to be met, or it would cost money. Color cost money. Mistakes cost money. That's why Mike Collier would constantly torment us with cries of-,"Sell ads, sell ads . . . " until it was emblazoned in our brains. Interviews had to be conducted, stories had to be written and typed. Pictures had to be ordered, taken, developed, and cropped. Captions had to be written. Layouts had to be drawn, checked, and finalized. Everything had to be labeled correctly. All to meet the deadline.

Sometimes, by the fault of no one, work would pile up, so that everything just described would have to be done the day of the deadline. These marathons sometimes lasted until 6:00 or 7:00p.m.

"There's too little time to do too many things," said Tia Sofatzis.

Some people were surprised to learn that the yearbook didn't just fall together by itself.

"It's nothing like I expected it to be. Things that look simple are a lot of work," said Monika Chin.

And yet, despite all the work, the constant pressure, and a perpetual shortage of white-out, the staff worked together remarkably well as a team. Someone was always helping someone else, and our resident computer expert, Mark Cumming, helped everyone. For the first time in history, we didn't miss a single deadline, we weren't running back and forth to the one-hour photo place, and we didn't Federal Express anything. Technically, the year was a success.

But success can also be measured by something more important. Like when a class full of strangers at the beginning of the year is a class full of friends at the end of the year.

"Yearbook has been the most frustrating, yet the most rewarding class of the year. I loved working with this class," said Carmel Zimmerman.

Now that's success.—by Julia Berger, Editor-in-Chief

The Yearbook Staff would like to thank the following: The Administration, The Athletic Department, Ed Bordanaro, Al Cooper, Queen Elizabeth, The Gorbachevs, Homer, The San Francisco Chronicle, Dr. John Searles, William Shakespeare, The United Nations, The United States Olympic Committee, Jo Winzenread, Yary, and last, but certainly not least, Stan, Stan, The Yearbook Man and his Magic Ballpoint Pen.

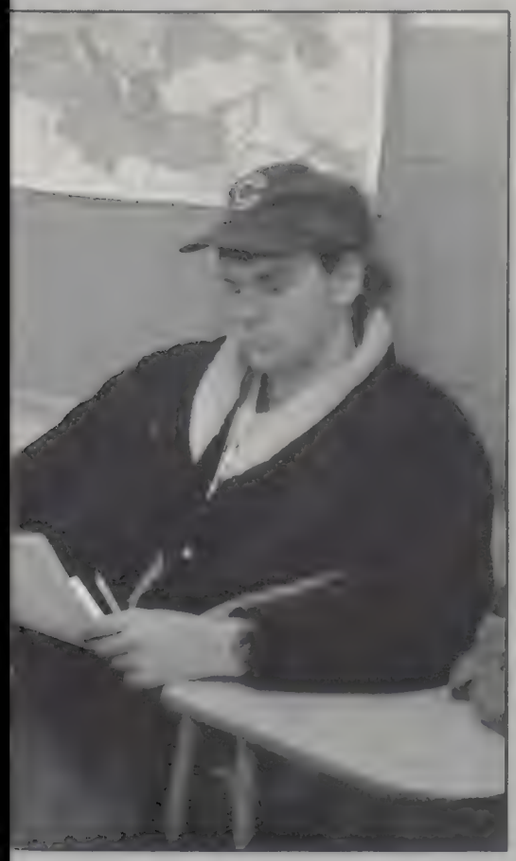

Where's the white-out when you need it? - Veronica Armstrong works on a rough layout. Armstrong is a cheerleader

Can it wait? - Mike Collier is interrupted as he assists June Ogden, a parent, with an ad. Collier listens to the music of Dead or Alive.

Let's see. "I" before "e" ... - Mike Brooks proofreads some copy before typing it into the computer. Brooks will graduate at the end of the year.

I can't think of a headline - Bessie Glossenger has a bout with writer's block as she tries to formulate a headline. Glossenger collects wine glasses.

Finally!

We made it! Another year, in the chronicles of Alameda High is, as they say, history.

We survived finals, five-day weeks, math classes, SAT's, and last, but certainly not least, we survived each other.

Goals have been met. Many seniors went to college, freshmen finally weren't freshmen anymore, and sophomores and juniors got to move up a notch on the ladder of high school.

Stress was certainly a factor.

"As a graduating senior, being able to surpass all of the expectations of teachers, friends, and my parents has been an emmense task. Four years of high school has undeniably been a stress-inducing experience with classes, sports, and friends being the major contributors," said Matt Bookspan.

Getting homework done, doing term papers, studying for tests, getting to every meet, and meeting every deadline required a discipline which was impossible to attain without some degree of stress. And while all this may have caused many late nights of finishing homework, and skyrocketing blood-pressure readings, the end result was worth it all.

Perhaps the most important aspect of this or any other year was the element of friendship. For the first time in our lives, our peer group had more influence on us than our parents. We spent more time away from home, and we learned by experience, rather than by being told. And friends were there to help us, every step of the way.

"Although this year has been pretty tough, I guess I had a pretty good time. But without my friends, I don't know if I could've made it through," said Lisa Young.

Good luck in the real world.—by Julia Berger

Have a Coke and a smile - Mike Cuadra basks in the splendor of his soft drink of choice. Next year, Cuadra will reside in the "real world."

Can you really feel your pulse through your wrist? - The students of Ms. Carmel Zimmerman teach her a thing or two. Zimmerman teaches both English and yearbook.

But, but, what does it all mean? - Helina Salmi realizes the true meaning of life, as Mylene Perdiguerra flashes a knowing grin. Salmi is an exchange student from Finland

You're never alone if you have a periodic chart - Dr. Susan Paden lectures to her Physics class. Paden also teaches AP Biology Ironman material - Aaron Decelle and James Lee psych themselves up for the run. Both are on the Cross Country team.
